THE PETROLEUM MARKET.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD AND RANGE OF PRICES.

One year ago, on November 1, the contract between the Standard Oil interests and the large majority of the producers of Pennsylvania for the shutting in of about one-third of the daily production, in order to bring about a reduction in stocks above ground, first went into effect. Nearly a month previous the organized producers had agreed to stop the drill, both agreements covering the period of a year. Within the first few months of the shut-in year certificate oil had advanced to $1 per barrel, with a premium on white-sand oil varying, say, from 10 to 25 cents. A collapse to the seventies followed, chargeable largely to the operations of producers outside of the agreement, which at times stimulated production, and to the fear of the consequences which would succeed the resumption of drilling by all the producers and the release of all the shut-in wells. Since the summer depression and demoralization there has been a recovery to the nineties, and the premium on all fresh white-sand oil is now uniformly 25 cents. The drill is three times more active than a few months ago, the export trade has moved with no spirit, except at intervals, and all speculative conditions in Wall Street have ruled the larger part of the time adverse to bullish sentiment. Speculation on any large scale has not visited the oil trade in about a year, and the general attitude of traders since the advancing tendency of values was first displayed, last July, has been hostile to a rise. Viewing these facts, does it not seem fair to ask whether crude values are not on a substantial basis in the nineties and whether the rallies are not legitimate and the slumps artificial? Does it not seem somewhat probable that the producer has a right to look ahead toward a decided rise to a higher plane in case the public should show any speculative appreciation of the statistical position of the commodity?

The complete pipe-line reports for November, published last week, afford an opportunity to note the change in the features governing production and consumption. They showed a reduction in net stocks from October of 1,068,831 barrels, a reduction from November, 1887, of 10,148,255 barrels and from November, 1886, of 14,226,563 barrels. The reduction in all net stocks within two years comes within 500,000 barrels of the total amount of certificates, available for a good delivery at the Exchanges, now outstanding! The amount of these certificates has been lessened by 5,987,113 barrels since last year and by 9,101,878 barrels since November, 1886. Compared with November, 1886, the shut-in movement of last year cut down the daily average of pipe-line runs 31,904 barrels; last month with all embargo as to drilling, pumping, etc., removed, the increase in the average runs is less than 7,000 barrels a day. A daily average excess of deliveries of 8,970 barrels two years ago is increased by the shut-down to 44,782 barrels and when all restrictions are removed the excess only falls to about 38,000 barrels! The growth of consumption is suggested by the progressive average of the deliveries through the varying of the runs of 81,000 barrels in November, 1886; 84,000 barrels in 1887 and 84,600 barrels in 1888. Appended are comparisons of the November figures of all the pipe lines for three years:

November— bbls. 42 gals.	1886	1887*	1888*
Daily av. runs . .	72,146	40,242	46,693

* The shut in agreement began Nov. 1, 1887; ended Oct. 31, 1888.

The November exports of oil and its products, according to the Washington Bureau of Statistics, shows a good gain over November, 1887, in both value and quantity. The quantity shipped in the first eleven months of 1888 is smaller than in the corresponding period of 1887, but the substantial increase in value proves that a higher rate was obtained. Here are the figures for the month and from January 1:

	Month of November. 1887.	1888.	Gains.
Gallons	47,820,406	52,156,334	4,335,928
Value	$3,713,074	$4,259,284	$546,210
	From Jan. 1 to Nov. 30. 1887.	1888.	Changes.
Gallons . .	530,571,678	506,153,493	Dec. 24,418,185
Value . . .	$41,246,286	$42,549,492	Inc. $1,303,206

It may be expected that the daily average production of oil will rise to 50,000 barrels, or even 55,000 barrels, if any success attends the future operations around Pittsburg, Penn., but even this rate would not save the visible supply from depletion at the average of from 6,000,000 to 9,000,000 barrels a year. The bears are praying for another Cherry Grove freshet, and only that would give them permanent control of the market. The Bush Creek developments last week were of a small character, and the attention of the trade is now drawn toward some Taylorstown wells that are nearing completion. The net stocks, according to pipe-line figures to date, promise a reduction in December of about 1,000,000 barrels. The daily average of runs has been 44,195 barrels, against 46,693 barrels in November; 41,918 barrels in December, 1887; 69,166 barrels in December, 1886, and 63,270 barrels in 1885. The deliveries average 78,018 barrels, against 84,636 barrels in November, 85,168 barrels in December, 1887; 82,012 barrels in 1886, and 70,588 barrels in 1885. The figures reported from December 1 to 13 (charters to the 14th) were as follows:

	Runs.	Deliveries.	Excess deliveries.	Charters.
Total bbls.	574,535	1,014,241	439,706	447,693
Average per day .	44,195	78,018	33,823	31,978

While there was a slight falling off in the transactions in National Transit certificates at the New-York Exchanges last week, the market scored a material gain upon the advance of the week previous. The bear party resisted the rise with its usual talk about an indifferent public, fear of Lima competition, Russia's power, etc., and for several days on frequent raids broke values from around 91 cents to below 89 cents. But the lowest price of the week proved to be 88 5-8 cents, and the sellers around 90@91 cents only aggravated their own straits. From 90 3-4@88 5-8 cents the market gradually hardened to 90 7-8 cents, was beaten down to 89 1-2 cents, and then, under the stimulus of news from Brush Creek, which encouraged buyers and discouraged sellers, it rose with large trading to 93@92 1-4 cents. These are the highest prices which have prevailed since the break late in October over the "Clarion scare," and the bears are arguing with some show of plausibility that the realization of profits and the removal of a considerable short interest, especially if the field news is somewhat bearish, will effect a reaction. On the other hand the prominence achieved by the speculation is beginning to attract outside support, and the small volume of certificates is so concentrated in strong hands that if it suits the wishes of holders the price can be carried much further without permitting any but natural fluctuations. The market closed with lessening animation, but strong in tone.

The range of prices and the total dealings in National Transit certificates at the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange for the last three weeks were as follows:

Refined oil for export moves without sensational activity on a steady basis of values, but in sympathy with the strength of crude there was a late advance of .05 cent to 7.30 cents per gallon here, and 7.20 cents in Philadelphia and Baltimore.
