THE JEW OF THE DRAMATIST AND NOVELIST.

THE JEW IN ENGLISH FICTION. By Rabbi David Phillipson, D. D. 12mo, pp 156. Cincinnati: Robert Clarke & Co.

Dr. Philipson's lectures on "The Jew in English Fiction" attracted considerable attention at the time of their delivery, and they should be welcomed in this more permanent form as the expression of educated Jewish sentiment upon an interesting question. The author follows the treatment of the Jews in the drama and novel, and shows how gradually the popular odium which was represented in the conception of Marlowe's "Jew of Malta" has given place to a more just and dispassionate idea of the Jewish character. From the "Jew of Malta" even to Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice" is a considerable distance. Dr. Philipson holds that in Shylock Shakespeare meant to draw a more dignified and generally human figure than Marlowe had presented in Barabbas, though in effect the ferocity with which Shylock insists upon the forfeit nominated in the bond neutralized the efforts of the dramatist to temper the popular antipathy to the race. Cumberland, in "The Jew," was the first English playwright to put upon the stage a noble conception of a Jew, and some may think that he overdid the thing almost as much as, in Dr. Philipson's opinion, Dickens overdid it in his character of Riah in "Our Mutual Friend."

The rabbi has nothing but admiration for Scott's Rebecca in "Ivanhoe," though he does not approve of Isaac of York. But it must be remembered that if the Jew of the Middle Ages is always represented as a usurer, the fact is due far less to prejudice or malice than to the superior prominence which history has given to this class. As Dr. Philipson observes, there were also Christian usurers, and often they were more grasping and avaricious than the Jewish money lenders. This may be granted, yet it does not affect the fact that the majority of the old usurers were Jews, and that their business concentrated upon them the hatred of the community. Dickens indeed began with a very bad Jew—Fagin—and only created Riah, practically as an atonement for the sinister conception, toward the close of his career. Dr. Philipson thinks Riah not natural; too good, in fact, "for human nature's daily food." Perhaps he is, but he is certainly a very pleasing character, and powerfully drawn. Disraeli of course apotheosized his race in "Coningsby" and "Tancred," but Dr. Philipson is not seduced by the glories of the "Great Asian Mystery," and plainly expresses the opinion that Disraeli deceived himself with vain imaginings when he wrote about the restoration of the ancient people to Palestine, and when he supposed them to hold a monopoly of divine revelation.

It is especially interesting to note that the rabbi has no faith whatever in the Palestine restoration scheme. He regards it as wholly impracticable. He declares that the Jews have long developed beyond the possibility of re-establishing themselves in Palestine, which has ceased to offer any adequate field to their energies. They are, he maintains, no longer a separate nation. They have become incorporated with the nations they live among. American Jews, German Jews, French Jews, English Jews, are today Americans, Germans, Frenchmen or Englishmen just as much as the Christian citizens of their respective countries. George Eliot, in "Daniel Deronda," he considers the only novelist who has fully grasped the Jewish character, but unfortunately she has represented in Mordecai and Deronda only a helpless fanatic and an unpractical dreamer. Many of the views expressed in this little volume are doubtless new to most readers, and the lectures generally are full of interest and shrewd, sagacious reflection.

The above property is owned in fee simple and free from all debts and incumbrances. Also nine miles riparian right on Cyprus Creek, with three dams built and in use, and locations for three more, soon to become a permanent source of income.

The growth of Florence is the most remarkable in the "New South," the population having increased since September last from 2,300 to 7,500, due entirely to advantages offered all classes of manufacturers. Four railroads enter Florence, though competing with navigation on the Tennessee.

Should a "town lot" boom reach Florence, which appears certain in the near future, the company's property should increase in value ten or twenty times. Without disturbing the treasury assets, it is estimated on a careful basis that the annual income will be sufficient to pay the stockholders at least 15 PER CENT. DIVIDENDS.

Investors are urged to make a thorough examination of the properties.

Full particulars and prospectuses can be had of the financial agent, who has personally visited and examined the properties.
