SHOT DEAD BY FRANK DUFFY.

A YOUNG MAN KILLED AT FORT HAMILTON.

THE NOTORIOUS RUM-SELLER MURDERS GEORGE CUNNINGHAM IN HIS RESORT ON LONG ISLAND.

George Cunningham, a young man who had been in this country less than four months, was shot and almost instantly killed by Frank Duffy, in the latter's barroom, at Fort Hamilton, L. I., at an early hour yesterday morning. Duffy has been arrested, and is now in the Raymond Street Jail awaiting the action of the Coroner, and Frank McHugh, the only one who saw the affair, is locked up in the same jail as a witness. The shooting occurred between 12 and 1 o'clock, and Cunningham is supposed to have been drunk at the time. Duffy, who did the shooting, is well known in New-Utrecht and Brooklyn, and at one time was a familiar figure in Tammany Hall, during the reign of Tweed. At that time Duffy kept a barroom at the Bowery and Grand-st., and over the door was the sign, "This is the house Frank Duffy built." Duffy took an active part in the politics of the old Seventh Ward. After he gave up the place at Grand-st. and the Bowery he finally drifted down to Fort Hamilton and opened a barroom in Fifth-ave. Wherever Duffy went he took along his big sign, and it is now at the Fort Hamilton place. The rumshop soon became a notorious resort for prize-fighters, and many contests were settled in the building.

Not far away is the house occupied by Mary Ann Folsom, who was tried four years ago for shooting her husband, and with her lived her nephew, George Cunningham. Cunningham was idle and dissipated, and last night about 8 o'clock he started out with Frank McHugh and visited a man named McGlein, who is to take part in a prize-fight shortly, and McHugh, assisted by Cunningham, rubbed him down. They had a number of drinks, and Cunningham was under the influence of liquor when he and McHugh returned to Mrs. Folsom's house about 11 p. m. After remaining in the house for a time, they went over to Duffy's place and had a drink. Then there was some card-playing, and the young men left the place. Just what happened after that is not clear, as McHugh and Duffy tell different stories. It would appear that after Cunningham and McHugh left the room, Cunningham tried to get in again, and Duffy barred the way. Then two shots were fired by Duffy, and at the last shot Cunningham threw up his hands and fell forward on his face. After moaning a few times and gasping out the word "whiskey," he died.

Cunningham's body was removed to his aunt's home and Coroner Herman Kohne, of Brooklyn, was informed. Duffy and McHugh were at once arrested. McHugh says that when they went to Duffy's place Duffy was sitting in the room, and a woman named Jane Wigley, who lives with Duffy, was lying on a bench. Cunningham invited the woman to have a drink, and after he had treated everybody asked for a pack of cards. They played three-card monte for some time. Duffy was beaten a number of times, and finally endeavored to get the two out of the place. McHugh says that he went out of the side door and he called to Cunningham as he went out to come along. When he got about fifty feet from the house he turned around and saw Cunningham standing on the back stoop. Duffy was standing in the door. He again called to Cunningham to hurry and started to walk along slowly, supposing that Cunningham was following. He had walked only a few steps when he heard a shot, and he turned and called to Cunningham to come or he might get killed. He says that Cunningham stood still, facing Duffy. Then Duffy fired point blank at Cunningham, who fell. He says that neither he nor Cunningham had any trouble whatever with the woman, and that if there was any it must have occurred after he left the place.

Duffy tells a story which differs materially from that told by McHugh. He says the two young men tried to "bunco" him and he told them to go home. They were drunk and noisy. Cunningham grabbed the woman, almost tore her dress from her back, and attempted to assault her. Duffy says he then grappled with the men and pushed them out of the door. He stood in the door and Cunningham made a rush for him, at the same time trying to pull something from his pocket. Thinking that it was a pistol, Duffy says, he drew and fired over Cunningham's head. Cunningham did not stop and Duffy says that he then fired at him.

Dr. Shepard impanelled a jury yesterday afternoon. Coroner Kohne will hold the inquest. Duffy does not seem to be greatly disturbed over the shooting, and appears to believe that he will be acquitted on the ground that the shooting was in self-defence. Duffy's license expired several weeks ago and he had not been able to obtain a renewal. It was supposed that the place was closed.

IMMIGRANTS WHO ARRIVED LAST YEAR.

WHAT THEIR OCCUPATIONS AND DESTINATIONS WERE—THE NUMBER.

There were 374,741 immigrants who arrived at the port of New-York in the last year. Their occupations were as follows: Architects, 72; brewers, 563; butchers, 1,814; barbers, 848; bakers, 1,583; blacksmiths, 1,786; bartenders, 280; bricklayers, 716; carpenters, 3,656; cabinetmakers, 1,459; confectioners, 377; cigarmakers, 624; cooks, 431, coopers, 434; farmers, 28,612; florists, 208; gardeners, 701; hatters, 418; iron moulders, 866; laborers, 104,348; locksmiths, 1,196; laundrymen, 12; masons, 3,353; miners, 4,670; machinists, 1,672; millers, 636; musicians, 660; painters, 1,425; pedlers, 789; plasterers, 268; porters, 242; potters, 217; printers, 582; saddlers, 578; shoemakers, 3,575; spinners, 451; tailors, 5,076; tinsmiths, 755; tanners, 573; wagonsmiths, 416; weavers, 1,534; waiters, 763; all other occupations, 14,764; no occupation, including women and children, 180,638; total, 374,741.

GOOD WORK OF THE LEGAL AID SOCIETY.

The seventeenth annual report of the German Legal Aid Society, completed yesterday, presents an interesting review of the work of this organization during the last year. This society has for its object gratuitous legal assistance whenever necessary to all who may be worthy of it, and who from poverty are unable to procure it, and frequently avoids litigation by acting as mediator between employers and employes. During the year, 5,541 persons have sought the aid of the society's attorneys, and have received through their efforts $74,232 27. In all, the society has obtained since its organization for 51,689 clients, payments amounting to $340,724 72. The greater portion of this money was due to poor wage-earners. The attorneys' report earnestly urges the introduction of a law into the Legislature permitting orders of arrest in cases of wages not paid to workingmen after judgment. The law now provides that one who does not pay wages to a workingwoman may be arrested after judgment, and the result has been so beneficial that the society hopes to get a bill through the Legislature extending the same privilege to the men. The treasurer reports that the income of the society during the year was about $5,000, which barely covers expenses. In view of the charitable nature of the enterprise, President Briesen and the other officers of the society are hopeful that many members of the bar will become members during the coming year and thus enable them to extend their work. The directors are: Arthur V. Briesen, Frederick W. Holls, Robert Behr, Alexander Beckers, Friedrich Krutina, R. Guggenheimer, Carl Schurz, William Keuffel, Antonio Knauth, A. J. Dittenhoefer, F. Kroeber, F. Sollinger, Percival Knauth, Herman Ridder and Charles F. Wiebusch.

JEWELLERS HAVE THEIR ANNUAL MEETING.

The New-York Jewellers' Board of Trade held its annual meeting yesterday at No. 43 Maiden Lane at 2:30 p. m., with the president, Edmund J. Scofield, presiding. The treasurer's annual report showed that the receipts during the year were $101,755 42, and the present resources from cash on hand, accounts, etc., to be $1,838 32. The secretary reported that during the year there had been an increase of seven members, making a membership of 157. The president congratulated the board as being the largest trade organization in the city, and urged the members to bring their numbers up to 200 before the close of the year. The following officers were then elected for the year: President, Edmund J. Scofield; vice-presidents, August Oppenheimer and George E. Fahys; treasurer, David Keller; secretary, Herbert M. Condit; directors, E. J. Scofield, George E. Fahys, A. J. G. Hodengyl, J. C. Allen, Max J. Lissauer, David Untermyer, Frank H. Richardson, J. B. Bowden, F. R. Simmons, David Keller, August Oppenheimer, George M. Van Deventer, E. V. Clergue.

A vote of thanks was given to Herbert M. Condit for the efficient manner in which he performed his duties during the year.

ARMY AND NAVY NOTES.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL WILLIAMS'S RETIREMENT—NEW ARMOR SPECIFICATIONS.

Washington, Jan. 26 (Special).—Adjutant General Williams of the Army does not retire on account of age until November 5. By law, his place must be filled by promotion of an officer in the Adjutant-General's corps, the selection of such officer being left to the President. Within a few days it has been learned that at least two of the assistant adjutant-generals will enter the contest for promotion, Generals Ruggles and Vincent. The former is attached to General Williams's office, and the latter is on duty in the office of the commanding general of the Army. General Ruggles, it is reported, is favored by his chief, while General Vincent has the support of Major-General Schofield. Mr. Cleveland will be confronted with an unusual military condition. General Vincent, who retires on November 16, 1896, is junior in rank, but senior in age, to General Ruggles. Should the latter be promoted, the former can never become the head of his corps; but, as General Ruggles retires about sixteen months after his competitor, his subsequent advancement is possible. In former similar cases the junior officer in rank has been selected, in order that both might in due course reap the benefits of long and faithful service and become heads of their departments.

The Military Academy Appropriation bill for 1893-94 contains a provision authorizing the appointment of an officer of the Medical Corps of the Army as professor of military hygiene at West Point. There are three surgeons on duty at the Naval Academy, and lectures on practical subjects from a part of the academic course. In addition, the gymnastic exercises of the Naval cadets are supervised by a medical officer, and all athletics are conducted in accordance with scientific principles. On the ground that the course at West Point is already crowded, no little opposition to the introduction of a new study was offered by the academic board. But in the construction and care of quarters, location and management of garrisons, and in other military duties, some knowledge of sanitary and hygienic principles was necessary, in the opinion of the committee, and the objections of the board were therefore waived. Only occasional lectures will be delivered.

The Navy Department has been engaged in the preparation of new specifications for armor requirements, under supervision of Lieutenant Niles, who was Naval inspector of steel at the Bethlehem works for about five years and who is regarded as one of the ablest experts in this line in the country. Upon their approval by Secretary Tracy the new requirements will be sent to the steel manufacturers of the country. While it is not known what modifications of existing armor specifications have been determined upon, it is authoritatively stated that as a result of experience and increased knowledge the ballistic or chief tests will be modified. The old idea has been to obtain armor plates which would not crack upon impact, whereas the present desire is to prevent perforation by projectiles. During the consideration of armor specifications representatives of the Bethlehem Co., Carnegie, Phipps & Co. and the Midvale Steel Works visited the department and submitted suggestions and requests relative to certain business methods to be observed. It is expected the three firms mentioned, and probably the Otis Steel Company, of Cleveland, and others will compete for the new $3,000,000 armor contracts.

Interest in the case of Captain Meeker, of the Marine Corps, has been revived by the recent statements of Consul-General Hanna, upon his arrival from La Guayra. According to Mr. Hanna, Captain Meeker exhibited due judgment and zeal in the disposition and management of the marines landed at La Guayra by Admiral Walker to protect the Consulate during the last days of the Venezuelan revolution. Mr. Hanna reiterated his expressions of regret at Captain Meeker's trial and conviction by a court martial on charges of neglect of duty on shore; and such statements are in accord with his testimony before the Meeker court. Captain Meeker's case was received by the Department early in November, but so far no conclusive action has been taken upon it. It is known, however, that the Judge-Advocate-General is now preparing a brief of the circumstances and evidence connected with the case, and it is believed that a decision will be reached soon.

THE BAY STATE DIOCESE TOO LARGE.

A PROBABILITY THAT THE DEATH OF BISHOP BROOKS WILL BRING ABOUT A DIVISION.

Boston, Jan. 26 (Special).—It is among the possibilities that the death of Bishop Brooks may crystallize a sentiment in favor of dividing the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts. It is the opinion of many that the onerous character of his work as bishop, in addition to the numerous other duties devolving upon him, did much to hasten the death of Dr. Brooks. The growth of the Episcopal Church in the State during the last fifteen years has been phenomenally great. Nearly every parish has increased in membership, and a large number of new parishes have been established. At present there are 200 parishes and mission stations, each of which must be visited once a year by the bishop. Though most of these parishes are easily accessible, the task of visiting them must consume a large amount of the bishop's time and vital energy, in addition to which there are a large number of religious and charitable institutions of which the bishop is ex-officio the head, and which he must visit. It is argued that it is unfair to any man to ask him to assume an office of leadership in the diocese, and then compel him to spend nearly all the time in the drudgery of travel. Had the diocese been divided when Dr. Brooks entered upon his duties, it is thought by many that he would be alive to-day.

If the question of division should come up in the next diocesan convention, which meets on May 3, the proposed new diocese would probably consits of the western half of the State, including the counties of Worcester, Hampden, Hampshire, Franklin and Berkshire; and the See city would be Springfield. At the start this diocese would be by no means as weak as many Western dioceses which have been in existence for many years, and the Church within its limits is growing steadily. Moreover, some Episcopalians in the western part of the state feel that a stronger type of churchmanship could be developed, if the section was free from the dominating influences of Boston.

IVY ROCHE GIVES HER TESTIMONY.

STRONG EVIDENCE AGAINST MRS. LECK, WHO IS CHARGED WITH ABDUCTING HER.

Testimony of an unmentionable nature was given yesterday in General Sessions in the trial of Mrs. Rosanna Leck on the charge of abducting Ivy Roche. Jacob Storms, of the Yonkers Beef Company, who called himself Harry Lawrence, is indicted with her. The trial is before Judge Martine and Assistant District-Attorney Weeks is prosecuting the woman. Jacob Berlinger appears for the defence. Mrs. Alice Roche, mother of Ivy, testified that the girl was only fifteen years old, having been born on July 4, 1877. Mrs. Roche became acquainted with Mrs. Leck in October, 1890, at the flat of a friend in West Thirteenth-st. A year later, the defendant asked Mrs. Roche to let Ivy live with her. Mrs. Leck said that she was ill and needed help about the house. She would pay Ivy $2 a week and clothe her. The witness consented to Ivy's accepting the situation.

Ivy was then called as a witness. She said that she had been employed to dot veils before going to Mrs. Leck's house. At first the woman lived at No. 110 West Twenty-ninth-st., and later she moved to No. 144 West Twenty-eighth-st., and to No. 158 West Fifty-second-st. The witness went with her. She first met Harry Lawrence at Mrs. Leck's house in September last. The witness was then called Irene Stanley. On October 13, Mrs. Leck took the girl to the Getty House in Yonkers, where Lawrence visited her frequently. He gave her money, part of which she turned over to Mrs. Leck. The case was adjourned until to-day.

FOR A SERIES OF LECTURES ON PROGRESS.

The series of lectures to young men which were given last winter in the Church of the Divine Paternity, Fifth-ave. and Forty-fifth-st., were so successful that a similar series has been arranged for this year, to be given on the Sunday evenings of February. Well-known speakers have been secured, and the lectures will be free to all. A committee of fifty young men have the arrangements in charge, and with the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Eaton, the pastor of the church, extend a cordial invitation to all young men to be present. Ladies also will be welcomed. The subjects and speakers for the course have been announced as follows: February 5, Rossiter W. Raymond, on "Scientific Progress"; February 12, Carroll D. Wright, on "Industrial Progress"; February 19, Edward M. Shepard, on "Political Progress", and February 26, the Rev. Dr. Gustav Gottheil, on "Religious Progress."

A TESTIMONIAL FOR MR. WHITEHEAD.

The employes in the Special Agent's office at the Custom House yesterday presented to George W. Whitehead, the retiring special agent in charge, a handsome solid silver inkstand bearing the following inscription: "To George W. Whitehead, Special Agent of the United States Treasury from his New-York official associates, January 25, 1893." Colonel L. M. Montgomery, who succeeds Mr. Whitehead, made a speech in presenting the inkstand and Mr. Whitehead responded.

STRAY NOTES HERE AND THERE

The high hat is still the abomination of the theatre. Most women will not wear anything else, and are not to be educated up to the point of taking it off when they get inside the house. Some men intend to adopt a device that was tried successfully at a Broadway theatre the other night by a man who found himself seated far back, and his vision obscured by a long row of plumes, pompons, tufts, velvet fringes, plush crests and other superfluous plumage. During the first act he stood it pretty well, but when the curtain went up on the second he folded up his great coat till it made a mound a foot thick, and placing it in his chair sat upon it. From that elevation he saw all there was of the play. There were some objectors behind him, two of them being women with the highest of high hats, but he was allowed to remain unmolested.

A novel bill of fare will be enjoyed by a party of wealthy young club men, who are training themselves in the way of the epicure. These followers of Sam Ward think of nothing just now but eating, and they take turns in arranging dinners. One of them must have come across the story of Montaigne about Geta the Emperor, as he is evidently trying to imitate that eminent gentleman, of whom it is said that he was accustomed to have all his dishes served at table according to the first letters of their names, as, for example: Pig, pike, pie, pudding, poultry, pork, pancakes, etc., as one course, and so on through the alphabet. No one is expected to eat of every dish, though all will be served. The mortality that follows this feast will be noted with interest. A question that now agitates this society of epicures is, should soup begin or end a dinner? The discussion was begun some time ago by Dr. Koch, the great German, who believes that soup and coffee should change places.

A recent convert to Spiritualism is a man who lost on the election. He attended a seance in January, 1892, at which only amateurs were the mediums of communication between the two worlds, and saw many curious things. He was a sceptic. The familiar slate trick was tried. A poet washed two brand-new slates perfectly clean in the presence of all, placed the tip end of a pencil between them and screwed them together. They were then laid on the head of a well-known writer of prose, a woman who believed. Presently the writing began, the movement of the pencil being plainly heard by all. At its conclusion the slates were taken apart, and the message from the occult world was read. It predicted the nomination of Cleveland by the Democrats and of Harrison by the Republicans, and said that Cleveland would prevail. It was all done in rhyme. The unbeliever laughed at the idea. Still unconvinced when the nominations were made, he bet all that he had on Harrison. After the election he went off to a quiet place and thought, and he is now a confirmed slate-writer.

When the elevated roads were first built the air was filled with murmurs and complaints. People living in the streets and avenues occupied by them could not sleep. But after a while they grew accustomed to the noise, and the lamentations ceased. The continuation of the sound of rolling wheels is no longer heard by the dwellers along the lines of road; the sense of hearing is dizzied and lulled asleep. A resident of Columbus-ave. tells of a curious experience, which proves this. "I have lived," he says, "within ten feet of the elevated road these three years, my room being on a level with the track, yet in all that time I cannot recall the night when I could not sleep for the noise. I think I never heard the rattle of the trains. One night I awoke form a sound sleep, and as I lay there a sense of uneasiness overcame me. For a long time I could not understand it. I got up and went to the window, strangely oppressed. I must have stood there half an hour. Suddenly it occurred to me that the trains had stopped running. Not a sound was to be heard. I looked up and down the track, and not a car was in sight. Presently, however, a train came along, then another and another, and I went back to bed and fell asleep. In the morning the papers reported a block on the road that had lasted an hour or more. I saw through it all then. It was the first time in my life that I had been wakened by silence."

THE QUESTION OF GUNS FOR THE ARMY.

ANOTHER OPPORTUNITY TO BE GIVEN TO AMERICAN INVENTORS TO SUBMIT MODELS.

Washington, Jan. 26 (Special).—In recent years vast strides have been made in the development of small arms. The old single-fire, long calibre muskets have been dispensed with by the leading foreign Powers, and in their places magazine rifles of greatly reduced calibre have been adopted. This country has been slow in supplanting the old with new model guns. The Navy has the Lee magazine gun, but its calibre is, like the single-fire Springfield musket in use by the Army, of the obsolete pattern. More recently the subject of small calibre magazine guns has received greater attention in this country. In September, 1890, the Secretary of War convened a board of officers of the Army to examine and test small arms of modern character. The board was in session until last September, and during its investigations subjected fifty-three rifles received by it to thorough practical trials. The majority of the guns tested by the board were of American design and manufacture, and it was hoped that one of this description would be adopted. Such was not the case, however. Instead the Krag-Jorgensen gun, a foreign invention, was accepted, and the report of the board having been approved by Secretary Elkins, that gun now constitutes the model for the military service.

It appears that although the opportunity to submit magazine small arms covered a period of about two years, a number of meritorious models were not completed in time to be tested by the board. It is also found that the Department's requirements and experiments have stimulated invention in small arms, and that many new designs or improvements are now ready for trial. As the number of guns immediately needed by the Government will be about 200,000, with a certain large increase in case of war, the cost of changing from old to new guns will amount to several million dollars. In order that the best arm, preferably one of American design, may be secured the War Department has just issued authority to inventors again to submit models of magazine guns to the National Armory at Springfield for examination and for trial. If the trials at the armory indicate that the guns submitted possess sufficient merit to warrant further consideration, more exhaustive tests by a board of experts will be ordered. In the trials, all guns will be compared with the Krag-Jorgkesen arm in determining their merits. Consideration will be given only to muskets adapted for practical military purposes, and unless especially excepted, those of 30 calibre alone will be tested. The Department places no restriction upon the number and form of cartridges contained in the magazines. With respect to arms tested by the former board, objections to defects previously developed must be met or remedied to entitle the gun to consideration. If upon examination an arm or improvement offers a reasonable hope of successful development, just and proper assistance will be afforded the inventor by the Department. Models or descriptions of models may be forwarded to the armory at any time within the near future, and these, together with any accompanying information, will, if desired, be considered as confidential by the Department.

HEAVY GOLD SHIPMENTS TO-MORROW.

The shipments of gold to France by the steamer Normandie, which sails to-morrow from this port, are to be as follows: Lazard Freres, $1,500,000; Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., $1,100,000, and Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., $750,000, a total of $3,350,000. The shipments are likely to reach a total of $4,000,000 and some bankers would not be surprised if $5,000,000 in the yellow metal went out.

THE WEATHER "BULLS" COAL FOR THE AGENTS.

At the monthly meetings of the Eastern and Western sales agents of the anthracite coal producing companies yesterday it was decided to make no change in circular prices for February. The sentiment prevailed that the recent severe weather had served to stiffen actual rates to the scheduled basis and that if rates were maintained the companies could make big money and pave the way for advances later on. No attempt was made by the Eastern sales agents to limit the output of coal for February. It was agreed that the "cold snap" had imposed sufficient restriction from natural causes upon the production of anthracite to limit the month's yield to about 2,500,000 tons, which is considered barely adequate to meet probable demands. Coal men expect that the reduction in stocks this month will continue through February unless a remarkable thaw sets in.

PLANS FOR A BIG BANK BUILDING.

Plans were filed yesterday in the Building Department for a handsome new twelve-story office building, by the National Shoe and Leather Bank. The new building will be erected on the old site at Broadway and Chambers-st., and will cost $240,000. J. C. Cady & Co., No. 31 East Seventeenth-st., are the architects.

HE ROBBED THE UNITED STATES MAIL BOX.

Policeman John Walsh, of the Elizabeth-st. station, arrested Charles Jones, nineteen years old, who lives at the Union Lodging House, Bowery and Hester-st., Wednesday night, for robbing the United States mail-box at Pearl-st. and Broadway. The mail matter stolen had been left on the top of the box. It is not known how many packages Jones stole, but he had several clock springs in his pocket, placed on the box by the F. Floeber Clock Company, and a fan, left by W. H. Hasbrook, of No. 526 Pearl-st. There were also a number of stamps in his pockets, taken from packages.

Jones was arraigned in the Tombs Police Court yesterday morning, and was held in $300 bonds.
