A SCHOOL ADVERTISEMENT.—It has not been necessary for the Packard College to advertise for years past, as the seating capacity of the rooms is fully taken up, but once in a while the old fervor comes on, and I go into the newspapers or print a little book, just to keep my hand in, and help to support the publishers and printers. It is not well to drop into "innocuous desuetude" even in the matter of advertising, and so I keep at it in my own way. My last effort has been to print a pleasant little 32-page book under the title of "A Familiar Talk on Business Education," and to mail it to anybody who has the desire to read it, and the energy to ask for it. The book is beautifully printed on good paper and is not likely to be put in the waste basket. Besides, if one begins to read it he is apt to continue to the end. It is a good book to read on the elevated train, or while waiting for dinner; or even with dressing-gown and slippers "under the evening lamp." If there is a good reader in the family, it can be read with profit aloud while others are listening. It is not a thrilling story, by any means, and does not mention a "32-calibre Smith & Wesson with two chambers empty," but is just an ordinary conversation between two intelligent gentlemen; the one wanting to find out all about the school, and the other doing his best to give the information. They talk about a lot of other things, incidentally, but manage, after all, to keep pretty close to the main subject. The reader is apt to put himself in the visitor's place, and is curious to know what the effect upon him will be—whether, after all, he will conclude to send his boy to the school. The book doesn't clear the matter up entirely, and the reader, like the visitor, is left to his own conclusions. I would like to say more about it, but it is so much better said in the book itself that I do not care to forestall it. Anybody can get the book by sending for it. It is not even necessary to inclose a stamp. Very few books are published on such a liberal basis. Address
