NEITHER SIDE WILL BUDGE.

MR. DAMROSCH WILL FIGHT IT OUT AND SO WILL THE UNION.

THE TROUBLE LIKELY TO END SYMPHONY CONCERTS FOR THE WINTER—JOHN HUNT TELLS THE PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION'S SIDE OF THE STORY—HE SAYS THAT HIS ORGANIZATION WAS THE MAKING OF THE LEADER'S FATHER.

The trouble between Walter Damrosch, leader of the Symphony Orchestra, and his musicians, which led to the breaking up of Sunday night's concert at Carnegie Music Hall, is by no means settled. Both sides are firm, and the probabilities are that the Symphony concerts are at an end for this winter. And it is all owing to the fact that Mr. Damrosch employed a non-union musician to perform on Sunday night. The members of the Musical Mutual Protective Union are firm in standing by the article in their constitution which provides that no non-member shall play with them, and Mr. Damrosch is equally firm in his determination not to be dictated to by any organization. A meeting of the union will be held this morning at 11 o'clock, and the matter will be discussed. John Hunt, president of the union, said yesterday to a Tribune reporter:

"Two years ago Mr. Damrosch brought over to this country a concert-master, who was also an expert soloist on the violin. He said he could not get a concert-master here who was good enough. At the same time he imported a violoncellist. He told the union then that he did not wish to antagonize it in any way. He asked us in what way we could help him, and was told that the only way was for him to have these men in this country six months before they began their engagement. He also brought Jules Conus and a man named Klopfel, both experts. Conus made his application to join the union the second day he got here. This was in May. The concerts began in October, so neither man under our six-months law, could appear at the Symphony Concerts. They secured engagements elsewhere.

"We tried to make one of these men (his name was Brodsky) an honorary member of the union, but the attempt failed. Mr. Damrosch came before the board before he hired Brodsky, and asked that he be permitted to play in the Symphony Orchestra, but the request could not be complied with. But in Hegner's case it was different. Mr. Damrosch told his men that the Board of Directors would do nothing until the quarterly meeting, so they played at the first concert. This was in November—the last Saturday in that month. When I heard what Mr. Damrosch had told his men, I sent our sergeant-at-arms to call the attention of all the members to the six-months rule. When they saw Mr. Hegner on the stage last night they all refused to play. Hegner was fairly forced upon the stage by Mr. Damrosch. We have no feeling against Hegner, and when he has been in this country for six months we will gladly welcome him into the union. Mr. Damrosch really ought to be thankful to the union, for we introduced his father to the public in 1879, and started the Symphony Orchestra. There is no truth in the story that we offered Hegner $2,000 to throw up his contract.

"If Mr. Damrosch will not agree to abide by the rules of the union his resignation will not be accepted. He will be expelled."

A phase of the case which the musicians are bringing forward now as proof of the fact that Mr. Damrosch is not altogether far from disingenuousness in his claim to be fighting merely for an abstract principle, was thus stated yesterday. Mr. Damrosch, it is said, utilized the Hegner incident simply to compel the orchestra to do an act which would enable him to cancel the contracts which he had made with the members, the carrying out of which was threatening to become a burden. These contracts were to be cancelled by the burning of the Music Hall, war or other popular calamity, or a strike. They called for 100 concerts. After the controversy over Hegner arose, it is said, Mr. Damrosch, through his agent, Keyser, said to his musicians that, owing to the hard times, it would be impracticable to give the whole number of concerts. He therefore proposed that forty of the concerts be cancelled, and agreed, if this were done, to go on without Hegner. The men did not acquiesce in the proposed modification, and the Hegner incident thus became an agency by which they were compelled to bring about the contingency which relieved Mr. Damrosch of the burdensome contracts.

Late last night a Tribune reporter called at Mr. Damrosch's house and read him the ultimatum. In reply he said:

"It really does not trouble me in the least. To belong to the union is not vital to me. I need never have joined it. I pay my men full union rates, many of them far in advance. I shall fight this fight to the bitter end. I am determined to have the men in my orchestra I want, union or non-union. I am encouraged also in the stand I have taken by scores of telegrams and letters urging me to stand where I am now standing. I have nothing to add to what I have already stated. I have been most courteously treated by the president of the union, but the secretary has done all in his power to battle against me, and hardly in the spirit of a gentleman. I have been backed up, too, in the most magnificent way by the press.

"To-morrow I am going out of town. Where I cannot tell you, for I want a few days of perfect rest after all this trouble. But my going away does not mean that I am going to knuckle down to the union. I have lots of outside promises that I can build up again a splendid orchestra."

HEARD CRONIN'S DYING CRIES.

TESTIMONY OF MRS. HOERTL AT THE TRIAL OF DANIEL COUGHLIN.

Chicago, Dec. 18.—At the trial of Daniel Coughlin this morning Isaac Robinson, a policeman, testified that his attention was drawn to the Carlson cottage May 7 by having arrested a man with a German accent coming from the side of the cottage late at night. The man was taken to the station on suspicion and let go the next morning. While Robinson was arresting the German another police officer came up with a second suspect under arrest, who had an Irish accent. The latter prisoner said, referring to the German, "That's his partner." The Irishman gave his name as Kelly, and was let go for lack of evidence. He is believed to have been James J. Cunnea, one of the conspirators, who is at large. This testimony was not given at the first trial. Robinson noticed one of the outside shutters of the Carlson cottage was broken near the top. There was no light to be seen in the cottage all night.

Joseph Hoskler, a policeman, told of meeting two suspicious characters standing near the cottage May 12, a stormy night, at a late hour, and they said they lived at the cottage. He saw them go in at 12:30 o'clock, and noticed a light through the shutters.

Pauline Hoertl told the jury the story of all she saw and heard outside the Carlson cottage the night of the murder. She said: "I had been working in the neighborhood that night, and tried to get in my house on Racine-ave. When I got there I could not get in because my husband was away and I had no key. So I went out to look for my husband in the saloons he drinks in. I was walking on Ashland-ave., north of the Carlson cottage the depth of this courtroom, when I saw a horse and buggy drive up fast to the cottage from the south on Ashland-ave. There were two men in the buggy. When the driver reached the cottage, he stopped in front, turned the horse's head quickly, and the other man jumped out instantly."

"What kind of a horse was it?" asked Mr. Bottum.

"It was a white horse."

"What kind of a looking man got out of the buggy?"

"He was big and wore a soft hat. He took some things from the buggy; one looked like a box. He crossed the boards over the ditch and ran up the steps. The gate was open, and he did not stop at the door. It seemed to be open for him. When the man got inside, the driver of the horse and buggy turned and went south on Evanston-ave. This was at 8 o'clock. I came up to the cottage, and when I got in front of it I heard a big noise, as if people were fighting inside and some one was trying to get up. Then I heard the sound of a body falling on the floor near the window. At the same time I heard a man's voice crying out, 'O God! O Jesus!' All this scared me, and I was walking away when I saw a man coming toward me from the back of the cottage. This made me hurry home. I could see nothing in the cottage, because the shutters were closed."

The woman's cross-examination occupied most of the afternoon session. It developed that a Mrs. Schiller, against whom Mrs. Hoertl testified in a police court case, was the only one among other persons to be put on the stand by the defence for the purpose of impeaching this woman's testimony.

A PRIZE FOR STUDENT ATHLETES.

Princeton, Dec. 18 (Special).—P. W. Miller, the newly elected member of the Princeton Advisory Committee, offers on behalf of the Philadelphia alumni a $250 cup to be competed for in track athletics on the Princeton Field by the schools of Philadelphia.

THIS FREE FIGHT MAY END FATALLY.

Frank Pettito, thirty-six years old, of No. 452 West One-hundred-and-fiftieth-st., and Michael Iorio, twenty-one years old, of One-hundred-and-eighty-fourth-st. and Harlem Road, were held in the Harlem Police Court yesterday charged with felonious assault. Pettito slashed Iorio's brother, Pasquale, with a razor so vigorously that he may not live, and Iorio stabbed Pettito's brother several times with a stiletto. Both of the injured men are in a critical condition at the Manhattan Hospital. The fight took place at Pettito's house early Sunday evening. For some time a bitter feeling had existed between Iorio and Pettito, and a party was arranged at which the two factions were to be friendly again.

Everybody got drunk and began to fight. At the end of it all one of the Iorios was found with fifteen stabs and cuts on the body, nearly dead, while one of the Pettitos was stabbed in the abdomen, his throat was cut and a long slash was found under his left arm.

BUSINESS AT THE EXCHANGES.

There was a better feeling evident in the market yesterday, and several of the properties offered were sold to parties other than those at interest. R. V. Harnett & Co. offered No. 77 West Ninetieth-st.; the property is a three-story, stone front house on a lot 18.9x100. It sold for $17,500 to Henry G. Leist.

William Kennelly offered a lot 25x100.11 in Third-ave., north of One-hundred-and-fortieth-st.; it brought $8,600 from F. J. Southware.

The same auctioneer offered a plot 50x100 in Lowell-st., 150 west of College-ave.; it sold for $5,025 to Hitchcock & Smith, the defendants in the suit.

L. J. Phillips & Co. offered a lot 25x100 in One-hundred-and-forty-sixth-st., west of Brook-ave.; it brought $16,900 from the plaintiff in the proceedings.

The brokers report a more active inquiry in the rent market, and, while not much as yet has actually been effected, it seems as if the new year will show greater activity than has been experienced for some time.
