COSTUMES AT THE SALON.

THE OCCASION NO LONGER A REALLY FASHIONABLE FUNCTION.

GRAY STILL A PROMINENT COLOR IN TOILETS, AND PLUM ITS RIVAL—SEVRES BLUE ALSO CONSPICUOUS.

Paris, May 20.

The opening day of the Salon, as a millinery event, grows more disappointing each year, and, as the crowd is always too great to permit one to see any but "skied" canvases or to afford much opportunity of meeting one's friends, the day, viewed in the light of a function, is rapidly losing its old-time prestige. While tickets may be purchased at the door at 10 francs each, there is little possibility of preserving such an atmosphere as that which distinguishes a private view at the Royal Academy, and the many English people who run over to see the "vernissage" are apt to pronounce it much more amusing than their own, while at the same time they comment on its rowdy character.

Frankly, it is no longer fashionable to attend vernissage, and, although the immense Salle des Machines was packed to suffocation on Saturday, "tout Paris" was absent. In isolated detachments it may have "looked in" during the morning, but that was all. The traditional Salon déjeuner of salmon, with green sauce, was served to but few of the "vraies élégantes" of Parisian life. Their places were perhaps taken by the crowds of foreigners always in Paris in the spring, and, of course, we saw the usual sprinkling of big and little lions in the artistic, literary and dramatic worlds.

Crowd and dust are not the best environments for dainty toilets, and most women showed their appreciation of this fact by wearing tailor-made gowns of light-weight wool or of cloth. There were, however, some examples of elaborate costumes well worth description, but the typical gown was an elaborate confection of wool, with mousseline de soie front, or else a quiet silk of the foulard order, and with little trimming save of the material itself. That peculiar shade of bright blue generally called Sèvres blue was the most conspicuous color worn. There were any amount of gray gowns, but gray was only a general tone over the crowd, while the blue made strong notes of color impossible to avoid noticing.

There were also some shades of plum color that attracted attention, and pale blue in combination with purple occurred in many smart toques. A great many women carried parasols—the parasol seems to be a necessary accessory to a smart costume now—and the handles, lacquered in bright colors, made these conspicuous.

Many gowns of the princess cut were in evidence, and in many cases gray wool or silk formed the material for these. Some of these gowns have the draped front; a good many of them fastened on one side with a scant ruffle that descended to the hem. A deep attached ruffle is an effective way of finishing a princess skirt.

RESTORATION CAPES POPULAR.

There were few outside wraps worn, and the few capes seen were mostly of the Restoration style. This is a long, comfortable cape, clinging closely to the figure and reaching to the knees. It is by no means so dressy as a short col, but possesses a certain air of elegance. One made of cadet-blue cloth was lined and trimmed with white satin. The narrow revers, the facing to the high collar and the yoke that extended over the shoulders were of satin, striped with cords of black velvet, and from this yoke hung the cape, in the form of five ruffles of cloth.

These long, close capes are the thing now, and will probably increase in popularity during the summer. There are other forms, called the Empire, or Directoire. Mme. Rejane is wearing its "Décoré" a good example of the latter. This is of pale yellow cloth, with arabesques in velvet of a deeper shade ornamenting the collar and the top shoulder cape. There are two more shoulder capes, with edges cut into deep scallops, and the garment itself, which comes to a foot of the hem of the skirt, is given the appearance of a double cape by means of a scant ruffle attached to the lining.

GRAY PERFORATED CLOTH.

Here is a description of an odd costume that could hardly fail to attract attention. The material is a gray perforated cloth, and the princess form in which it is made is built over a lining of white satin. The gown closes on one side with "soleil choux" of Sèvres blue, a steel button forming the centre of each chou. These "choux soleils" are extremely fashionable at the moment. They might be described as sunburst rosettes; they are simply rosettes made of finely pleated gauze, mousseline de soie or satin, with a button or fancy ornament in the centre.

the usual attached flounce, a deep pleating, twice as deep behind as in front, and this is headed by a trimming of white satin folds, arranged in points with a narrow line of gold thread. The blouse bodice has a yoke of white, embroidered with gold, and a white belt. There is really little new to say of bodices. The blouse, with its fancy empiècement and belt, remains a popular model.

Some jacket bodices of plain cloth, worn with fancy wool skirts, looked pretty and smart. One costume consists of a belted jacket of plum satin cloth, worn with cravat bow, and fancy front of white mousseline de soie. The skirt is of white wool, checked off by irregular lines of plum color, and is trimmed about the hem by a latticework pattern of cloth folds. Another costume of the same colors is a plum moiré silk, worn with a sleeveless guipure overblouse that descends on the skirt in the form of a tight-fitting apron.

There is one novelty a little difficult to describe. It consists of colored lines of different widths, running through the material, and the effect may come in the stuff itself, or may be made by laying folds of mousseline de soie over a plain color.

A cream-white poplin with splashes of blue on it, the lines varying in width from three-quarters of an inch to a mere hairline, is an example of the first, and for the second there is a white satin gown covered with black mousseline de soie, the black being arranged in folds of varying depth to give much the same effect.

A PRETTY FOULARD SUIT.

Here is a description of an elaborate foulard gown shown by a Rue de la Paix couturière: The silk is a turquoise blue, with a black lace pattern running over it. Tiny ruchings of black mousseline de soie are extensively used in the trimming. The skirt has a high ruffle of the silk trimmed with three ruchings and headed by another, and the ends of the long sash are heavy with still more ruchings. The bodice is shirred in the form of a jacket, and from under the shirrings escape deep ruffles that fall almost to the waist. The revers of the jacket suggest a sailor collar, and are of dark-green satin, embroidered with black. These are edged with more ruffles, and a scarf passing under them ties in a big bow on the bust. The sleeves are shirred, with ruffles forming wings at the shoulders.

Redfern shows a charming evening dress of craquelé black tulle over an emerald-green transparency. The tulle has large dots of chenille on it, as well as the crinkled pattern, and heavy black lace makes a deep flounce about the bottom of the dragging skirt. The corsage is a blouse, with unlined, shirred sleeves, and is trimmed by bertha ruffles to match the flounce of the skirt.

A pretty novelty is the use of a scarf of two shades of green mousseline de soie. This starts with a bow and diamond ornament on one side of the bust, is draped across to the other side of the waistline, where it meets the sash; is fastened there with another bow and ornament, and descends in long ends on the skirt. A tailor-made gown from the same establishment is of biscuit-colored cloth, trimmed with steel buttons. The jacket is in the form of a triple bolero, trimmed buttons, and with the side-points of the lowest bolero just covering the waistline. The skirt hangs from a fitted empiècement that makes deep points on the side, thus carrying out the idea of the bolero.

BERNHARDT'S GOWNS.

The new play at the Renaissance presents some nice toilets, in spite of the fact that Sarah Bernhardt, even in modern costume, clings to the long-waisted effects and robelike apparel with which she has become identified. A beautiful negligée has a pleated undergarment of mauve mousseline de soie, and over this a sleeveless robe of heavy white lace, this robe being left open for some distance under the arms. The gown is trimmed with chains of pearls and with artificial violets. A dainty frock worn by the great actress is of some thin gray stuff elaborately embroidered in gray chenille, the embroidery apparently forming a sheath which holds the blouse bodice behind and on the sides and descends in a deep point on the skirt.

An evening gown worn by one of the actresses of the company is of sky-blue mousseline de soie, embroidered with fuchsias and gold beads. The gown is made over a Parme violet-colored foundation. The skirt is plain, with the exception of small ruffles around the bottom, and the décolletage of the corsage is finished by puffs of mauve tulle and bands of jet. The sleeves are finished at the elbows with flaring pointed cuffs of mauve velvet edged with jet.

A delicious little gown is of crêpe silk in rose pink, with the skirt close about the hips but long and ample at the foot. Three rows of wide guipure entredeux, framed in a scroll pattern done in narrow black ribbon, surround the skirt, placed at equal distances. A little jacket is formed of the entredeux and strips of the silk, on which is laid the velvet pattern. The blouse is of white tulle, closed in front by three big bows of rose tulle, with black velvet centres.

FOUR GIRL GRADUATES.

The commencement exercises of the Misses Bliss and Whitfield's school, No. 41 Mount Morris Park West, took place last night. The spacious rooms were beautifully decorated with flowers and ferns, the school colors of green and white predominating. The four graduates were Miss Malda Pierce, Miss Mabel Adams, Miss Jane Hecker and Miss M. Adams.

The programme opened with prayer offered by the Rev. Dr. Elmendorf, followed by vocal selections by Miss Edith Gibbons; a recitation in dialect by Miss Helen E. Bigelow; an apt essay on "Historic Scraps of Paper," by Miss Malda Pierce, and an essay, "The Power of Habit," by Miss Mabel Adams. The address of the day was delivered by the Rev. Merle St. Croix Wright. After the presentation of the diplomas a reception was given. Among the guests were many prominent people.

PUBLIC PLAYGROUNDS PROVIDED.

"One good result of Senator Guy's amendment to the charter will be made manifest this summer," said an ardent clubwoman yesterday. "The amendment allows the use of school buildings and grounds by the public, but provides no means for utilizing them in a beneficent way."

The Association for Improving the Condition of the Poor will undertake this summer to pay all the expenses of running fifteen public school playgrounds as small parks for the people. This work is quite within the province of the association, as it is really a continuation of its summer schools, which will be supported hereafter by the city.

The committee in charge of the matter gave a hearing to those specially interested in the plan. Among those who urged the association to undertake the work were Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer, representing the Public Education Association, and Miss Carlotta Lowell, school inspector of the Fourteenth District. The plan of work proposed is simple. Using the roof and basement playgrounds, each will be provided with one or two kindergartners, who will lead the games for the children. In each schoolyard a load of clean sand will be dumped, and the little ones allowed to frolic in it to their hearts' content. It is expected that the sum of $2,000 will carry out this work.

THE WEEK IN SOCIETY.

The spring season is passing away in a perfect deluge, and it will stand on record as having been one of the most uneventful seasons known to the social world for a number of years. The merry month of May has been a decidedly moist one, and even the usual field sports at several of the country clubs have had to be abandoned on account of the rain and the soaked condition of the ground. However, the suburbs are well filled with patrons, and Tuxedo, one of the most populous, is just bursting into life and bloom. The park is just now in prime condition, and the roads, notwithstanding the incessant rains, are excellent for driving and bicycling. Many new cottages have been built and others are in process of erection. The clubhouse is always full from Saturday till Monday, and there is some talk of a garden fete to take place some time next month. Nature and art have both done so much for Tuxedo that it seems to be as nearly paradise as anything can be.

Newport is filling up fast, and at least a month earlier than usual. Among the latest arrivals are James J. Van Alen, the Misses Van Alen, Mr. and Mrs. I. Townsend Burden, Mrs. James P. Kernochan, who has just returned from a two years' absence in Europe; Mrs. Brockholst Cutting, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Pendleton Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sedgwick and the Marquis and Marquise de Merinville. The latter was formerly Miss Mary G. Caldwell, and this is her first visit to her native land since her marriage, which took place about half a dozen years ago. Among the arrivals from Europe last week were Dr. and Mrs. Bache Emmet, Mr. and Mrs. J. Roosevelt, Frederick Winthrop, Miss Edith Lawrence, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fulton Cutting, O. C. Barber, Bayard Cutting, Norman N. Dodge, Mrs. Fairchild, Miss Fairchild, who was presented to Queen Victoria at one of the recent drawing-rooms; Miss Jemay, Mr. and Mrs. Carlos de Heredia, Mrs. J. A. Wright, J. G. Cushing, W. Beekman, Miss Beekman, F. A. Constable and Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Fish.

Of the several weddings celebrated last week that of Miss Emeline J. Danforth, daughter of Mrs. George H. Danforth, to Louis Morris Starr, son of Theodore B. Starr, which took place on Wednesday afternoon in the Central Presbyterian Church, in West Fifty-seventh-st., was the most largely attended and picturesque. The bridal party, as it stood in the chancel, presented a most attractive appearance. The bridesmaids, attired in effective gowns of pink mousseline de soie over pink silk, contributed considerably to the beauty of the picture. These young women, who carried bouquets of pink roses, received as souvenirs from the bride handsome wreath stickpins set with jewels. Mr. Starr presented to his best man and ushers chased gold scarfpins, each set with a different kind of stone. The reception which followed the ceremony was a small and informal one on account of a recent bereavement in the family of the bridegroom. At the reception the engagement was announced of Miss Elizabeth H. Williamson, one of the bridesmaids and daughter of J. G. Aymar Williamson, of Wyoming, N. J., to George Henry Danforth, brother of the bride. Mr. Danforth is a graduate of Yale University. Another engagement also announced at the wedding was that of Miss Nella Vinal Wilder, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Enos Wilder, of Madison, N. J., to Dr. Edouard Ceresole, of Vevay, Switzerland, son of Colonel Ceresole, ex-President of Switzerland. The engagement was announced last week of Miss Mabel Hooper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Hooper, of Boston, to Bancel La Farge, son of Mr. and Mrs. John La Farge, of this city, and brother of John La Farge, jr., and C. Grant La Farge, who married Miss Florence B. Lockwood, daughter of Benoni Lockwood. Miss Hooper is a niece of Henry Adams, of Boston. Mr. La Farge is a member of the Calumet, Century and St. Anthony clubs and of the Society of the Sons of the Revolution.

The wedding of Miss Lilian S. Troth, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William P. Troth and sister of Mrs. John R. Drexel, to Richard Van Wyck, of this city, will take place at noon on Tuesday next, May 31, at the Philadelphia home of the bride's parents. Because of the recent death of the bridegroom's mother only a few friends and relatives will be present, and there will be neither bridesmaids nor ushers.

The month of roses will be ushered in with a number of weddings. One of the largest in town will be that of Miss Nina Larre Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin Waldo Smith, to Chester Burnell Duryea, which will take place at 4:30 o'clock next Wednesday afternoon in Trinity Chapel, West Twenty-fifth-st., near Broadway. A choral service by the regular choir of the church will accompany the ceremony, which will be performed by the vicar of the chapel, the Rev. Dr. Vibbert. The bridal gown will be of white satin, embellished with several flounces of old rose point lace. Among the jewels to be worn by the bride will be a necklace of pearls, a gift from the bridegroom, whose best man will be Julius Lay, a nephew of Levi P. Morton and United States Consul at Toronto. Miss Millicent Duryea, sister of the bridegroom, will be the bride's only attendant. In the list of ushers will be the bride's brother, George Stuart Smith, E. Ellery Anderson, jr., Harry Duryea, brother of the bridegroom, and Frank Duryea, a cousin. The bride has received many beautiful gifts. One from her mother includes six dozen of small silver, originally the property of the Emperor Napoleon. It was bought by the Countess Ratazzi, of France, and at the marriage of her friend Miss Bevan to Franklin Waldo Smith, was presented by the Countess to the bride, who in turn handed it over to her daughter. A reception to intimate friends will follow at the Hotel Cambridge. The honeymoon will be spent at the camp in the Adirondacks belonging to General Hiram Duryea, the father of the bridegroom, who won fame during the war by the bravery of his zouave regiment, and who recently organized and was first president of the Starch Trust. An elaborate dinner was given on Wednesday last to the bridal party by Mrs. Duryea, at her home, No. 80 Madison-ave.

At noon on Wednesday, Miss Pauline Martindale Pope, the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Clarus Pope, of No. 810 East Fifteenth-st., will be married to Joseph Paul Day, in the Church of St. Paul the Apostle, Columbus-ave. and Sixtieth-st. The bride, who was brought up in the Baptist faith, was recently received into the Roman Catholic Church. She is a granddaughter of the late J. Monroe Taylor, of this city, and was formally introduced to society at a large reception given at Sherry's about two years ago. Miss Helen B. Smith will be the maid of honor, and Miss Geraldine Howes, Miss Lelia Larrendon and Miss Mary L. Day, sister of the bridegroom, of this city, and Miss Mildred Quennelle, of Binghamton, N. Y., will be the bridesmaids. Mr. Day's best man will be his brother, Christopher C. Day. The ushers will be Frank Rush, Charles Freeborn and the bride's two brothers, Jay Monroe Taylor Pope and Charles Fairfield Pope. Robbins, of Princeton, and the ushers Hall Park McCullough and William [illegible] Vreeland. Immediately after the ceremony there will be a wedding breakfast served at Windcap, the country home of Mrs. Loomis, at Ringwood.

Another out-of-town wedding on Wednesday will be celebrated in the First Presbyterian Church, at Clarksburg, W. Va. The bride will be Mrs. Nellie Osborne-Pidcock, daughter of the late Joseph Freeman Osborne, of Clarksburg, and the bridegroom, Dr. Henry Tisdale Coggeshall, of this city. The ceremony will be attended by a number of guests from this city. Miss Nellie Osborne, of Clarksburg, and Miss Frances Faulkes Pidcock, of Brooklyn, small children, will be the bridesmaids. Francis Oliver, of this city, will be the best man, and the bride's brother, Robert Linn Osborne, Frank R. Moore, Camden Sommers and Lieutenant Cuthbert Osborne, cousin of the bride, will serve as ushers. Dr. and Mrs. Coggeshall, after June 12, will be at No. 102 East Fifty-seventh-st., this city. WOMAN'S PRESS CLUB ENTERTAINMENT.

The Woman's Press Club of New-York City gave a charming entertainment in the chapter-room at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon. Various phases of educational work were carefully delineated.

"Education and Citizenship" was practically considered by Mrs. Clarence Burns, chairman of the committee, and Miss Lillian G. Johnson spoke of "The New Basis—Kindergartens." "Manual Training" was ably presented by Dr. James P. Haney, supervisor of manual training in the public schools.

The subject of "The High School—Its Value and Latest Development" received skilful treatment at the hands of Miss Katherine D. Blake, one of the young and progressive city teachers. "The Relation of the Home to the School" was the topic assigned to Mrs. M. M. Greeley, and Miss Mary E. Tate told just what kind of education was necessary for citizenship.

The musical numbers consisted of piano solos by Marie Silberfield, the child pianist, and contralto solos by Miss Eleonore Broadfoot, and the afternoon closed with "The Star Spangled Banner" and a salute to the flag by the pupils of Public School No. 55.

Tea was served during a social half-hour.

ON TWO STREETS AT ONE TIME?

Women who propose making a wheeling tour through Germany may not find it so pleasant as they anticipate. A point much disputed in that country is, When two streets intersect, in which street is the point of intersection? It has been said that no man can be in two places at once, but in the following story the courts do not seem to agree as to the truth of this statement:

In Breslau bicyclers are forbidden to ride in certain streets. Recently a rider wheeling along a thoroughfare where cycling is permitted crossed a forbidden street and was arrested in the middle of the road. The policeman declared that he was in the forbidden street, while he swore that he was in the other, so the matter was taken into court. The lower court decided that he was in neither street, and so could not be fined for being in the forbidden one; but the upper court judged that he was in both, therefore must have been in the prohibited place, and ordered the fine paid.

LITTLE FACTS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS.

From The Woman's Home Companion.

Most vegetables should be put on to cook in freshly boiling water.

Salt should be added when they are about two-thirds done.

Lying in cold water for an hour or more will partially restore to wilted vegetables quality and freshness.

Every green vegetable should be cooked rapidly and uncovered to retain its color.

If the water is hard, a tiny bit of soda, not larger than a pea, added, will make the vegetables cooked in it tenderer and of better color. Ordinary water does not require such addition.

When soft water is used the salt must be in from the first, to prevent loss of flavor and substance.

Cooking a vegetable after it is done toughens, darkens it and detracts from its flavor.

The best dressing for vegetables at their perfection is butter, pepper and salt—cauliflower and perhaps asparagus excepted.

The older and staler vegetables are improved by a cream or drawn-butter sauce, the basis for the latter being the reduced liquor left when the cooking is finished.

TROPICAL DISEASES DISCUSSED.

THIRTY-FOUR PHYSICIANS LISTEN TO A LECTURE IN THE RED CROSS HOSPITAL.

The second in a series of conferences on tropical diseases was held Friday afternoon at the Red Cross Hospital, the subject of the day being the prevention of such diseases. Thirty-four physicians, most of whom had had practical experience in the treatment of the diseases of Southern climates, were present. The proceedings were in Spanish, and Dr. Charles K. Gill, of Brooklyn, acted as interpreter. Papers were read on yellow fever, malaria and dysentery, by Drs. Nunez, Sollosso and Francisco Marill, and a general discussion followed, in which Drs. Carbonell, Pizarro, Rive, Graham and J. H. Feuss participated. The discussion had special reference to Cuba, and the speakers were all agreed on the following points:

Camps should be located at least three miles from the shore, and, if possible, 1,000 feet above the level of the sea. Such places, it was stated, were plentiful near the Cuban shore, and on these heights are wells of excellent water, which can be used unboiled. When not found clean and clear, water should be filtered and boiled for drinking and washing.

Food should be taken in sufficient quantities, but not in overabundance. It should be largely vegetable, and fruits to which foreigners have been accustomed in their own country may be eaten by them in Cuba, with the exception of bananas, which Dr. Feuss does not advise. Grease should be avoided, and alcohol should never be taken except by the orders of a physician.

In malarial regions one grain of quinine taken three times a day, with a sufficient quantity of water, has been found serviceable.

Clothing should be light, and next to the body should be a loose absorbent garment of any material preferred, flannel excepted. The feet should be kept dry, and half-boots are the best for wear.

Hard work during the heat of the day should be avoided, if possible.

The next conference will be held at 4 o'clock on W
