THE DAY'S OPERATIONS IN STOCKS.

The stock market was reactionary the greater part of the day on speculative selling and operations for the short account. The net results of traders' transactions, however, were not encouraging to advocates of lower prices, for in the greater number of issues small fractional losses only were made, while in a few stocks net gains were recorded. Sugar Refining alone exhibited noteworthy weakness. The movement of this stock, however, is no criterion of the course of the rest of the market, for its price changes are too well manipulated and controlled by insiders to furnish a basis of comparison for the general course of values. Sales made yesterday were absorbed by substantial interests, and ready buyers were found on all concessions. The reaction was a help to the market, and conditions would be improved if further declines were made, although speculation is in no need of such a tonic so far as holdings are concerned. A setback would merely furnish renewed bull vigor from interests that have sold and are anxious to buy back at lower figures.

The course of prices yesterday, however, indicated no decided reaction in market values. The people who hold stocks showed no inclination to sell, the chief liquidation coming from weakly held accounts and speculative realizing. Despite the amount of realizing that has been done in the last week, stocks appear to be in strong hands; in the hands of people who can afford to hold them, through any setback, people who evidently have no intention of selling until larger profits are in view. Strong financial institutions and individual capitalists are in the current market. When they are ready to sell the backward swing of prices may be looked for. It hardly seems reasonable to suppose that they will sell with the prospects of an active and advancing market before them. The change in money rates a month ago reflected a change in financial sentiment over the effect of the war upon the country's industries and money markets, and with that change came the realization of the actual worth of securities and the favorable prices for the making of investments. That is why investors and capitalists are accumulating stocks and bonds.

The ease with which the current market absorbs sales proves, if proof of this sort is necessary, that money is seeking employment. This was again pronounced in yesterday's bond market, in which a heavy business, distributed over a large number of issues, was transacted. The high-priced shares showed greater tendency to yield than the lower-priced issues, but final prices were at material recoveries from the lowest of the day. Brooklyn Rapid Transit, Des Moines and Fort Dodge, American Spirits issues and General Electric were strong features. Now that the Bridge loop case has been decided in favor of the Brooklyn trolley companies the stock of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company will doubtless become a market favorite, as the earnings of the company are enormous, and the interests identified with the management are heavy buyers of the securities. The company's earnings in the last few days have been increasing at the rate of over $1,000 a day, as compared with the same time a year ago.
