YALE DOWNS HARVARD.

THE CRIMSON FALLS AN EASY VICTIM TO THE BLUE AT NEW-HAVEN.

SEVEN TO NOTHING THE SCORE IN THE SECOND BASEBALL GAME—GREENWAY PROVES INVINCIBLE—NEXT GAME PROBABLY IN THIS CITY.

New-Haven, Conn., June 28 (Special).—Yale defeated Harvard at baseball so easily to-day that the only wonder is how she managed to lose the first game of the series, even with Fearey, the wildest of twirlers, in the box. With New-Haven filled with hundreds of "grads" of all ages and stages of remoteness from undergraduate days, with class day the day before the game and commencement the day after, and with Greenway in the box, how could Yale lose? She couldn't and she didn't.

Yale Field attracted all of Yale and a large part of New-England and New-York this afternoon. Chapel-st. was filled with rejoicing alumni soon after 1 o'clock. The classes of '88 and '93 and '96 were most numerous, and travelled in zig-zagging battalions. Most of them were clad in white raiment purchased for a slight consideration for the occasion. Hundreds of them wore straw hats of the "farmer" type, emblazoned with patriotic mottoes, and others announcing to the world the virtues of the class in question. The various class battalions rioted through the streets preceded by numerous brass bands blaring waltzes to march time, when they were not playing "The Star Spangled Banner," which they were pretty much all the time. Chapel-st. was crowded with pretty girls and elderly "grads," who were content to watch the antics of the classes that were celebrating their decennials, their quintennials and their triennials. The windows and porches of all the houses along the route to Yale Field were filled with spectators frankly observing and observed. The trolley-cars were bouquets of blue.

THE SCENE ON THE FIELD.

There were eight brass bands on Yale Field when they had all arrived. They arrived separately, heading battalions of celebrating "grads," who capared all about the field six abreast, according to ancient custom. The spectacle presented resembled a rehearsal of a sun dance. The whole outfit at length bestowed itself comfortably, bands and all, in the west grandstand, where the bands proceeded to play different tunes simultaneously. The favorite remained "The Star Spangled Banner," but an earnest listener could catch here and there portions of "Lou, Lou, How I Love My Lou," "The Stars and Stripes Forever," "Forty-nine Bottles A-Hangin' on the Wall" and, in fact, "all the popular airs of the day."

About six thousand spectators occupied the grandstands. Harvard had a diminutive delegation which was heard at first, but which soon retired into gloom so profound as to enshroud it completely.

The result of the game was not in doubt at any time. Harvard was never really in the hunt. She was outplayed at every point. The only Greenway bobbed up again with his triumphant glass arm, and demonstrated that, all things considered, he is quite the most able occupant of the box who has exhibited himself this season on a college diamond. If he had great speed he would rank with the best in the history of college baseball. His control and judgment were thoroughly admirable, and, most important of all, he was as steady as a battle-ship whenever a case of the "rattles" would have been profitable for Harvard. Harvard got seven hits from his delivery. But of these, few enough as they were, three were scratch bunts, and the seven were distributed through five innings. It would be interesting to know why the Yale captain did not occupy the box in last Thursday's game with Harvard. Putting Fearey in to pitch amounted to making a present of the game to Harvard.

THE UMPIRE'S GOLDEN RULE.

Harvard did not play in the best of luck, and Gaffney, the umpire, did what little he could to discourage the Crimson. There used to be, and still is, a rule which says, "In case of doubt favor the runner." Mr. Gaffney's rendering of this rule was, "In case of doubt favor the home team." Harvard got considerably the worst of at least three decisions. In the second inning Haughton opened up with a clever double. Reid singled to left field, and Haughton attempted to score. Eddy sent the ball in to Greenway, who snapped it to Sullivan to stop Haughton's attempt at scoring. The runner was at the plate as soon as the ball, but Gaffney called him out. Again, in the eighth inning both Chandler and Robinson beat the ball to first, only to be sent to the bench by the complaisant Gaffney. This was discouraging, and had its effect on the play of the Crimson's team.

The game began under lowering skies, and at the fourth inning rain began to fall. Some of the spectators fled, but nine-tenths of them remained beneath the mushroom growth of umbrellas which at once sprung up. A slight drizzle fell at intervals during the rest of the game.

"Dutch" Carter, the greatest pitcher who ever wore a college uniform, exercised his opulence of length in batting grounders to the infield in practice, while ex-Captain Keator officiated in a similar capacity for the outfield. Heffelfinger and Hickok, of football fame, led sections of the joyous "grads" in cheering. A number of Yale men who sat in the grandstands wore the uniform of the United States Volunteers.

HOW THE GAME BEGAN.

Yale chose the bat, and De Saulles set the ball rolling toward Robinson, who made a clever stop, but could not recover quickly enough to catch the clever quarterback. Wadsworth bunted to Hayes, who lost his head, and held the ball until too late to stop either runner. Wear sacrificed both men along a base. Greenway went out on a fly to Burgess. Wallace lifted a long drive to centre-field, which Chandler misjudged badly, and De Saulles and Wadsworth scored. Camp struck out, and all the bands in sight rent the air with a potpourri that was tough on the tympanums of the crowd.

After Loughlin had gone out at first, Burgess singled, but was forced at second by Robinson, who was cleverly caught napping at first by the Yale captain. More distressing ensemble music (sic) by the bands.

Yale went out in one, two, three order. For Harvard, Haughton cracked out a pretty double, Reid singled and Gaffney distorted truth and justice by his decision on Haughton's attempt to score. Bear and Lewis smote the circumambient atmosphere thrice apiece. For the Blue, Wadsworth and Wear singled, but there was little profit, for the former was caught in the endeavor to steal second and the two next batters popped up easy flies.

HARVARD LOSES HER OPPORTUNITY.

Harvard's third inning put Greenway in the only uncomfortable position he occupied during the game. Hayes got his base on balls. Chandler and Loughlin singled, and the bases were full. The Harvard contingent, small as it was, was extremely vocal. Greenway smiled, and swung his good glass arm. Burgess smote a scorching grounder to Hazen, who nailed Hayes at the plate, and Sullivan was in time to catch the batter at first. It was the prettiest play of the game. Robinson popped up a fly to Hazen, and Harvard's only good chance for scoring was gone.

Yale scored twice more in the fourth after two men were out. Eddy singled, Sullivan bunted safely, and so did De Saulles, Eddy scoring. Haughton fumbled Wadsworth's grounder, and Sullivan crossed the plate. De Saulles tried to follow him in, but ran into Reid, who fell on his neck, but held on to the ball. Four runs, neither for Yale, and the bands played on and several other selections.

Harvard never got a man by second base after this inning. Yale added two more runs in the seventh, when De Saulles, Wadsworth and Greenway bunched singles, and another in the eighth, when Hazen and Eddy did likewise.

The rejoicing "grads" and their hard-worked bands ricochetted up through Chapel-st. again, followed by the thousands of undistinguished spectators, and everybody prepared to go to the Yale Glee Club concert in the evening to continue the celebration and to prepare for commencement to-morrow.

The third and deciding game of the series will be played next Saturday, July 2, at New-York on the Polo Grounds. If only Greenway can keep his glass arm, Yale ought to win. The score:

Cleveland, June 28.—Rusie was invincible in the first game, and the home team took a shut-out with only two hits. The New-Yorks went to pieces in the second game. In the second inning, with two out and two on bases, Grady dropped Zimmer's third strike. In trying to get the ball to second, a bad mix-up occurred, Zimmer and the two men on bases scoring. Anson's objections at one time in the game caused the umpire to have him ejected from the grounds. Score:

BASE HITS.

It looks as if the betting will be at least 2 to 1 on Yale in the final game with Harvard, providing Greenway pitches.

The Brooklyn team will not return to its home grounds until July 6.

Cincinnati's double victory yesterday gives it an advantage of twelve points over Boston.

The partial rest seems to have done Rusie much good. At Cleveland yesterday he pitched with all his old-time speed and skill, and had little difficulty in preventing his opponents from scoring.

The Orioles have slipped ahead of Cleveland, and the ex-champions are now in third place. There is only four points difference in the standing of the two teams.

While New-York won and lost a game at Cleveland yesterday, the chances are that it would have been two victories had Seymour been effective at critical points. In the game lost New-York outbatted Cleveland nearly two to one.

THE RACETRACK.

FOUR RACES FOR SLOAN.

ON EVERY MOUNT HE WAS AT THE FRONT.

FIVE OUT OF SIX FAVORITES TOOK FIRST HONORS.

It was a Sloan afternoon at the Sheepshead Bay races yesterday. The greatest of jockeys had a mount in each of four races, and he was first in every one. This record of his matched his exploit on Brooklyn Handicap Day, when he rode in four races and won them all. On Monday he had four mounts, but three out of the four were inferior to the Sloan standard, and three were defeated through no fault on the part of Sloan. Yesterday he was first with the odds-on favorite Alpen in the first race, with the odds-on favorite Irish Reel in the third race, with the non-favorite Autumn in the Surf Stakes and with the odds-on favorite Damien in the fifth race. No one of his victories was achieved by any rough or reckless riding. No one of them was due to any trickery or unfairness. Complete and unmixed credit is due to Sloan for his notable jockeyship, without a word of criticism. But Autumn's running in the Surf Stakes was in glaring contrast with his running in a selling race on June 23, when he was fourth to Alpen, Rusher and Mr. Clay. On that day Autumn carried only 104 pounds and was ridden by Maher. On June 23 Autumn, ridden by Sims, was fourth to Alpen, Miller and Muggins. Yesterday he was an easy winner with 112 pounds. Is there no reason for an investigation when Autumn improves so much between a selling race on June 23, when he was ridden by Maher, and the Surf Stakes on June 28, when he was ridden by Sloan? Who was in fault?

The studious and vigilant handicapper, after observing Autumn's running on June 23 and his running on June 28, may feel inclined to handicap Autumn in future handicaps with the tender affection which thrills his soul as he selects the weights for Forget. Isn't he fond of Forget? The devotion with which that man's heart yearns for Forget is like the fidelity of Acadian Evangeline to the errant Gabriel. No questions were asked. The failure to ask questions makes it plain, of course, that no questions were needed. Isn't that clear? And yet it is as sure as the rising of the sun that if any horse had run such races in England or in France as Autumn ran on June 11, June 14, June 21, June 23 and June 28 questions would have been asked and the responsibility for such in-and-out running would have been settled.

Evidently the racetrack officials approve the riding of Doggett on Handball and on Miller this year. It must be so, because they put no questions to Doggett. The placid serenity of these officials in regard to the consistent running of Autumn and the consistent riding of Doggett is refreshing. Philip J. Dwyer seems to be less enthusiastic concerning Doggett's riding than he was a few weeks ago, and he appears to be putting Williams on his horses in preference to Doggett. But why should Doggett worry? No one asks him any questions.

Rain fell during a part of the afternoon, but it was not copious enough to make the track muddy or to affect the racing in any way. The attendance was encouraging, and the charter was on the mount. The betting was noticeably active, and the improvement in the betting work was greeted with cheers. The form of the race public form was upheld in the victory of Alpen, with Tyrrhena second. On public form that was exactly the way in which the race should have resulted. Alpen was the odds-on favorite, and Tyrrhena was second choice.

In the second race public form was again reclaimed. Sims rode the favorite, Whisting Con, judiciously, and the second choice, Clonsilla, ran second, as she ought to have done. F. C. O'Reilly, owner of Whistling Con, has a big army of friends, and the success of his colt was applauded with zest. Every good fellow on the turf or off it who knows F. C. O'Reilly was sincerely glad when Whistling Con took the prize, and wished that O'Reilly might win many races hereafter. You see, O'Reilly is a right good fellow himself.

There's another William Easton, the nineteenth-century Demosthenes of turf orators. Easton is not sorry that fate has cast his lot in this century and not in the generation of Philip of Macedon. Not that he has any prejudice against the father of Alexander the Great. Easton says that the Philippics of Demosthenes were immoderately vituperative, and declares that the Athenians should have borne in mind that the James Webster of their day was inflamed by his own infernal fires, and his denunciations of the monarch who enslaved the little Grecian cities were intemperately vehement and violent. Every person who has listened to the fascinating eloquence of Easton's oratory is convinced that if Easton had been one of the speakers in that classical competition for the crown Easton would have distanced Demosthenes as effectively as Hamburg distanced Lutgert a few days ago. But Easton is no carping critic of the orators of ancient Attica. The reason why he rebukes that one was not an antique Grecian is that if he had been alive when Chaeronea was fought he would be dead now. Demosthenes is dead. Easton sensibly prefers to be a living American citizen (of British birth) rather than a dead Demosthenes.

But, in serious, earnest truth, William Easton has remarkable and fascinating powers of thoughtful oratory, and his addresses in famous turf cases have been marked by excellent judgment, great eloquence, wonderful fluency and charm. Mr. Easton says that English turfmen are anxious of purchasing American mares of choice breeding in order to use them as brood mares in Great Britain. This is an important turf matter, and Mr. Easton in all turf concerns speaks as one of authority and not as one of the newspaper writers. He is a turf authority of weight and eloquence. In the autumn of this year he intends to take over to England one hundred and fifty fine yearlings bred by J. B. Haggin. These yearlings ought to bring handsome prices in England, and ought to capture many rich prizes on the British turf.

In the third race public form was confirmed for the third time in the afternoon. Irish Reel was the odds-on favorite, as she should have been on public form, and, deftly ridden by Sloan, she was easy winner. Tremaro was Satanic at the post. His temper was so infernal that he caused a long delay, but he was second to Irish Reel at the end. Irish Reel took a long lead early, and none of the others could get near her.

Public form was exploded to atoms when Autumn, who has been looked upon as only a selling-plater, not fast enough and class enough to outrun stake horses in stake weights, won the Surf Stakes with amazing ease. Sloan rode him in true Sloan style. Is there any suspicion of wickedness in this? It was groundless that Autumn was backed with unbounded confidence by people who had been running him as a selling-plater whose ability to win a race in fair company, except with light weight, was a nullity. Miller, ridden by Williams, was second. Suppose that Doggett had ridden Miller as he had ridden him on so many times before. Then probably Miller would have been unplaced. The name of Jean Berand was sent out in the list of probable starters for the Surf Stakes, but the great colt did not run. It was a pity that he did not start. He could surely have won the Surf Stakes with ease, and then Autumn could not have been the cause of a melancholy turf scandal.

Sydney Paget's Damien, at odds or and with Sloan up, took the fifth race. That was public form. Thomas Cat was second and Howard Mann third.

The handicapper still has a soft spot in his head for jumpers owned by influential racetrack officials whose votes may be useful at any time in the selection of a salaried handicapper, while he has a hard spot in his heart for owners of no influence who are so unlucky as to possess jumpers. So Forget had a clack in the handicap. She has it still. First money was a gift to her at the weights. She was the favorite, although Sloan did not ride her. Sloan does not ride jumpers.

Last night the air was vocal with the wails and groans of the unhappy bookmakers. The backers of favorites had despoiled them without stint or mercy. It was a memorable day for public form—except in Autumn's case. Five out of six favorites, four of them ridden by Sloan, were triumphant, and all the winners, including Autumn, had large and imperious crowds of dauntless backers. It was a massacre of the betting-ring. Nevertheless, strange as it may seem, both the dead and the wounded bookmakers will be on the field of battle to-day.

There will be racing this afternoon at the Sheepshead Bay track and on every afternoon this week. Red Cross benefit on Friday. The meeting will close next Monday, July 4, when the Realization Stakes will be run.

Lander's concerts at the track are exceedingly delightful. Lander's music is so melodious that even the savage breasts in the betting-ring are soothed.
