GENERAL MARKET REPORT.

New-York, November 14, 1898.

COFFEE—The market for coffee shows no important variations after opening quiet at unchanged prices to a decline of five points. For the entire session prices scarcely varied more than five points from the closing figures of Saturday. The scope of the variations was so small that they failed to stimulate outside speculative interest, while the local contingent were not disposed to extend their responsibilities by making any new ventures. Quite the contrary was the tendency, and selling was the feature of the trading of the day. This arrested the decline. The early weakness was caused by unfavorable European and Brazilian cables. The decline of ½@¾ pfenning at Hamburg and the generally weak Brazilian advices, mail as well as cable, had but little to offset them beyond the fact of much larger warehouse deliveries in this country, 75,585 bags, to represent a very liberal distribution of actual supplies. The afternoon phases of the market were not such as to encourage expectations on either side of the account, and the situation was listless and uninteresting, up to the very close, except for a little local intertrading which made the transactions for the day 9,000 bags. Nothing whatever had been done on the evening call, and half the day had been past before sales had reached 2,000 bags. The market was finally made at Saturday's closing figures. There was a steady but tolerably steady market for spot Brazilian coffee at unchanged prices. No 7 Rio, invoice lots, 6¾c, and jobbing parcels, 6¾c. Cleared Rio, November 12, steamer Mozart, 12,000 bags; Bahia, November 12, steamer Sallust, 5,000 bags. Bahia weekly receipts were 9,000 bags; shipments to United States, 9,000 bags; to Germany, 5,700 bags; to rest of Europe, 800 bags; stock, 19,000 bags.

COTTON—The net result of to-day's fluctuations in cotton futures was particularly gratifying to the bull interest. Throughout the session the feeling among this class of traders was more confident than in some weeks, and not a little cotton was purchased on the theory that the lowest point for the season had been reached and passed, and that cotton was in a position to go decidedly higher. Among the influences aiding bull efforts were smaller receipts at both the ports and interior towns than expected, a firm set of cables from the Liverpool spot and future markets, and a report that higher prices were being demanded throughout the South for spot cotton. On this news prices advanced 1 to 6 points at the opening, with the market firm though quiet. An official report to the effect that light to heavy rains had occurred over Sunday in the Mississippi Valley and throughout the Eastern portion of the belt, together with private cables noting advancing prices for yarns and cloths at Manchester, led to further covering later in the morning, and before midday prices had scored an advance of 6@7 points. The afternoon market was irregular, easing off several points under profit taking by the more easily satisfied longs and several feeble efforts on the part of leading bears to force a reaction. Limited investment buying checked any considerable decline, however, and at the close the market was steady at a net gain of 6 to 9 points, having advanced to the last figures of the day in the last few minutes on a small rush of shorts to cover. Various reasons for the smaller receipts were put forth by both bulls and bears, the latter claimed that laborers were scarce on account of the low prices being paid by pickers to pickers, and that plenty of cotton still remained in the fields. Bulls, on the other hand, asserted that the crop had been overestimated, and from now on receipts would steadily fall off. Early estimates of 450,000 bales for the week's port receipts were cut down to one of 415,000 bales. A feature of local dealings was the continued buying of the January and March deliveries by a well-known export house and representatives of New-Orleans firms. Liverpool sold moderately on the early bulge, but subsequently turned buyer, owing to a failure of our market to react.
