THE DAY'S OPERATIONS IN STOCKS.

Transactions in stocks were heavy on a well distributed volume of business, attended the greater part of the day with advancing prices. In the dealings in Southern Pacific, Sugar Refining, Brooklyn Rapid Transit, United States Leather and several other stocks evidence of strong pool buying was not wanting. Bull pools in the current market represent an aggregation of capital of enormous extent. When substantial interests combine their resources in the stock market, prices are pretty sure to advance, although for good and sufficient reason the controlling interests may not undertake aggressive operations as soon as the operators with "tips" would like. Strong combinations of rich men are big holders of stocks. They began to buy stocks a long time ago, and they are not yet through buying. Believing in higher prices they bought heavily in the decline early in the fall, and the chances are that they will not sell out until prices have reached a very much higher level than that now current. The bull pools in this market are far stronger than the pools of ordinary times. They are not made up of professional traders, but of men who have millions behind them.

Aside from the so-called pool buying there has been a large accumulation of stocks by investors, by capitalists representing themselves only, and by public traders who have the good sense and the means to buy stocks outright and on big margins. While this accumulation of stocks has been going on another element in speculation has been selling stocks short on the belief that market values have already measured the actual worth of securities, and in consequence a gradual decline may be expected. Herein lies the technical strength of the market—a big short interest and stocks in the hands of rich men. Outside of the technical strength of speculation factors governing the real worth of stocks and bonds are stronger than ever before on record. When one considers the technical position of the market and the business position of the country one may find reason for caution, for caution is always wise in market operations, but it certainly will be difficult to discover any reason for pessimism or a belief that values will decline, except to the extent of fluctuations incident to market activity. The speculative spirit is growing, and if it can only be held in check until money becomes more abundant at this centre there will be fireworks in the market later.

The growing tendency to buy the low priced stocks is reflected in the heavy dealings in Southern Pacific, Standard Rope and Twine, Missouri Pacific, Norfolk and Western, Wabash preferred, Ontario and Western and other attractive issues. In yesterday's market transactions in the stocks named were heavy, especially in Southern Pacific and Standard Rope and Twine. The cheap stocks represent companies that are making money, and which in many cases will pay dividends on their common shares in another year, and increased returns on their preferred. The enormous dealings in Southern Pacific are based upon the company's earnings, which are making the company's dividend possibilities brighter every month. The same thing may be said of the buying of Norfolk and Western common and other issues. Southern Pacific earned in the first three months of the year more than twice the amount required to pay the entire interest charges for the year on the full issue of its collateral trust 4 per cent bonds. The market closed strong and active. An easier money market created new bull sentiment, while higher markets abroad were not without influence upon sentiment and prices.
