THE DAY'S OPERATIONS IN STOCKS.

Compared with the average day's business of the last two months yesterday's transactions in stocks in the first two hours were heavy. The total volume of trading for the day amounted to 250,418 shares, fairly well distributed throughout the general list. Prices opened on a decline, but after the first hour a rally set in which in many cases carried quotations well above the opening prices. The advance was due to support from substantial interests, which caused a rapid covering of short contracts. With the decline of Saturday and the early recession yesterday prices ruled at a level that doubtless appealed to people who make quick turns in the market and to people who are willing to take good securities at bargain figures despite the various factors of uncertainty in the situation. Bear traders are active at the moment, and several large speculators have, it is understood, begun operations for lower prices; but it is not likely that any save timid holders will sacrifice their security possessions. It may not be wise for small traders on margins to take a position on either side of the market at the moment, but the general outlook does not warrant the sale of investment securities at a loss. The recovery yesterday doubtless does not foreshadow a bull movement in stocks, while it is not believed in most circles that the decline on Saturday indicates extensive bear success. The bear element has not a technically weak market on its hands.

London was an active seller in the local market, its sales amounting to upward of 30,000 shares. Commission houses had a fair supply of selling orders from frightened customers, but there was no evidence of liquidation by important market interests. The bear element contends that the anthracite coal strike will have a materially adverse effect upon the cause of the Republican party, but it remains to be seen whether or not the investors of the country will accept this opinion as a sufficient argument to sell their securities. It is too early to judge of the extent of the current strike. As a rule strikes are not a safe basis for being short of stocks. In the present case the lack of concerted efforts on the part of the mine owners to prevent the closing of the mines lends encouragement to the view that the trouble will be extensive and expensive, and it is more to this than to any other factor that Wall Street traders feel safe in taking the short side of speculation. The money market situation is viewed with alarm by the same class of traders, but actual conditions do not suggest monetary disturbance. Surplus and cash holdings of the associated banks may fall for several weeks to come, and lending rates will undoubtedly rule higher. The banks, however, are in good condition to meet a drain upon their resources, and, barring some extraordinary development, such as Bryan's election, there ought not to be any real disturbance at this centre. If conservative financiers were doubtful about the present and future they would be calling home their balances from Europe rather than lending more money abroad.

The market relapsed into dulness in the afternoon, with firmness the only feature. In a few issues heaviness was noted. American Steel and Wire and Tennessee Coal and Iron were bought by insiders, and in People's Gas covering for the account of Chicago operators was reported. The granger shares were strong, and even the hard coal stocks failed to respond to the strike in the Pennsylvania coal regions. The Southern issues were generally heavy. Last prices were under the best of the day, with more net gains than losses. The money market was inactive and unchanged in rates. The fact that the money market made no response to Saturday's unfavorable bank statement had something to do with the strength in the stock market, while the refusal of some of the miners in the anthracite fields to strike also helped sentiment and prices.
