TELLS CAMORRA SECRETS

Captain Fabroni Describes Its Organization and Work.

EVEN JUDGES TERRORIZED

Makes Money from Every One, Down to Emigrants Leaving for America.

Viterbo, Italy, July 11.—Captain Fabroni, of the carabineers of Naples, who has been investigating the Camorra for several years, took the witness stand to-day and denounced the organization as the greatest of all criminal associations. With Marshal Capizzuti and Marshal Farris, also of the carabineers, he did detective work against the Camorra, under the direction of the Ministry of Justice. Farris played the gentleman, mingling with the aristocratic friends of Giovanni Rapi, the alleged treasurer of the Camorra, while Capizzuti, disguised as a Sardinian brigand, associated with criminals, and finally obtained the confidence of Gennaro Abbatemaggio, from whom he learned the secrets that led to the informer's confession.

Fabroni assumed the role of a clerk from the Ministry of Justice, and devoted his energies to proving a connection between the Neapolitan judiciary and the criminal organization. According to the crown lawyers, each man accomplished his mission completely.

Captain Fabroni is young and distinguished appearing, and as he testified today, speaking deliberately, with assurance and with great clearness, he made a deep impression. He said that he had studied the Camorra, not from a social or psychological standpoint, but as the captain of the carabineers, desiring to know the bottom of the criminal phenomena.

Blackmail and Usury.

The chief object of the organization, he declared, is blackmail and usury. A typical example was to be found in the Camorrist Danna, ostensibly a cobbler, who collected $60,000. Special members of the association, he said, introduce youths to women, who take them to gambling places, where they lose their money and get into debt. Then the usurer completes the work. Erricone, the witness said, had been on trial on such a charge.

"But he was acquitted," shouted Lawyer Bovio, for the defence.

"Every one knows what acquittals mean in cases in which the Camorra is concerned," retorted Fabroni. "Besides, the lawyer defending Erricone was the brother of the president of the court who acquitted him."

This was the signal for a great tumult. Erricone, within the cage, leaped to his feet and dashed at the bars, shrieking so wildly that it was impossible to understand him. The lawyers, especially Bovio, protested against what they considered an insult to the Neapolitan judges and lawyers. Bovio, addressing Fabroni, accused him of a vulgar insinuation and outrageous conduct.

Captain Fabroni, who faced the hurricane courageously, sprang toward Bovio. "After the documents you forged in Paris I refuse to lower myself to your level," he cried.

Fight in Court Imminent.

The excitement was intense. Police and carabineers rushed between Fabroni and the lawyer, as a hand-to-hand fight seemed imminent. The president of the court tried to quell the clamor. He finally requested Fabroni and Bovio to withdraw their words, which they both did.

The interrogation being continued, Fabroni described the gambling house conducted by Rapi, and Rapi's cleverness at cheating at cards. Rapi protested so violently that President Bianchi ordered him removed from the courtroom.

Fabroni said that nothing could escape the Camorra, which makes money out of everything and every person, including poor emigrants leaving for America.

The body of Cuocolo, the witness said, bore the marks that the Camorrists always left upon their victims, as a warning to others who might offend them. He declared that Enrico Alfano was the real head of the Camorra, although he did not appear to occupy that position, having invented the plan of placing a figurehead nominally in charge of the main organization and similar figureheads in supposed control of the branches. In each case a "selected Camorrist" was the ruling spirit.

Some of these dominating ones were among the accused, he said, and turning to the prisoners' cage he pointed out Mechiello, Barrollozzi and De Lucia as among the number whom he had in mind. This caused an uproar among the prisoners, the demonstration being led by Alfano. The noise was stopped only when the president threatened to send the prisoners back to their cells.

Captain Fabroni then told of the rule of the Camorra, which forbade a Camorrist to confess or to give evidence of the existence of the society, even when to do so might help the accused. On the contrary, a Camorrist was to be prepared to go early to prison, though the admission that there was such an organization as the Camorra might set him free.

Prisoners Again Warned.

The supreme object of the organization, he said, was to prey upon every one who fell into their clutches, from unfortunate women and sneak thieves to the highest officials. Whoever betrayed them was subject to a punishment varying from a beating to murder. The witness solemnly declared that Abbatemaggio was already condemned to death, and that if he left the prison it would be almost impossible for him to escape the vengeance of the Camorra. The prisoners protested against this declaration, and were again warned by the president.

Fabroni, in illustrating the power of the Camorra over all affairs in Naples, said that the "society of illumination" was required to pay tribute to Alfano to prevent the theft of their wires. The whole system intrusted to his protection was safe, other societies of the city also paid for protection, and so it had come about that the Camorra, in return for regular sums paid, did protection work that properly was the duty of the police.

The witness gave several examples of how the Camorrists obtained the support of prominent persons. Commendatore Petrosone, a former Deputy and president of the Chamber of Commerce of Caserta, had lost a pocketbook containing $5,000, he said. There was no doubt that it had been stolen. Baron De Matteo, a prominent Camorrist, offered to recover the money, and did so within twenty-four hours. Petricione offered a reward to the finder, but this was flatly refused. The witness remarked that De Matteo declined the reward, not because he was generous, but for the reason that he wished to use the influence of Petricione in more important circumstances.

HILL HAD GOOD FISHING

Railroad Man Back from Annual Trip to Labrador.

James J. Hill, chairman of the Great Northern Railway, returned here yesterday from his annual fishing trip to Labrador. He looked the picture of health as a result of his month's outing, and said he had had a good time and had caught plenty of fish.

He left his yacht, the Wacouta, on which he and his party made the trip, at Montreal, and came on from there by train. All the fishing was done on the River St. Jean, which runs up into Labrador, and its tributaries, which abound in salmon.

Mr. Hill would not discuss business conditions, saying that he had not paid any attention to business while away, and would need several days to familiarize himself with the conditions of affairs before talking about them. Asked if he had received any advices regarding the crops, he said:

"My advices are that the crops in the Middle West are somewhat spotted, due to the drouth that prevailed early in the month, small grains being the most affected. Corn, particularly in South Dakota, also suffered from lack of moisture, but recent rains have offset this, and from what I learn the corn crop ought to be a good one again this year."

Mr. Hill expects to be in the city about a week, after which he will go to St. Paul.
