Racing Once More Takes Place It Held So Long.

GIANTS NOW ON THE JUMP

John Paul Jones a Marvel in the Athletic World—Schmidt a Wonder on Links.

By Herbert.

Sports are running riot. It is hard to recall a time when so many important fixtures of compelling interest have been crowded so closely together. It is necessary to jump from one before it can be fully appreciated and digested to another which tastes quite as good. The opening of the racing season on Friday and the intercollegiate games at Cambridge on Saturday stood out only slightly in a very deluge of sports which included baseball, golf, yachting and all the rest. The appetite is now whetted for the feast to come in the way of the international matches in lawn tennis and polo, to say nothing of the amateur meeting of the Piping Rock Racing Association, which will add an extra touch for those who have a particular fondness for turf and field. This month of June, then, will be long remembered, for in addition to the fixtures mentioned the most important games of the college baseball season must be decided and the intercollegiate regattas at Poughkeepsie and New London rowed.

Twenty-five thousand persons or more wrote a brief for thoroughbred racing at Belmont Park on Memorial Day that was quite as encouraging as it was convincing. Such a whole-hearted expression that racing was wanted could not be misunderstood. The size of the crowd, the quality of the crowd, the spontaneous roar on the first call of the bugle, the continued cheering, spoke an approval for the sport and sounded a rebuke for those who in shooting at public bookmaking almost killed racing. It is little wonder that August Belmont and his associates in the Jockey Club feel that their efforts to rehabilitate the sport and to build afresh on a more substantial foundation have met with that encouragement so necessary in carrying on the work. There is urgent and compelling need for a continuation of that co-operation so freely given on Friday and Saturday. Men must wager, it would seem, but if they will confine themselves while at the track to the oral method, which, according to the courts, is not illegal, the directors of the various associations will be able to establish in time that racing can live without public bookmaking, which brought it to such an evil pass. All good sportsmen will join in the hope that long continuance will follow this revival.

If the associations which are conducting the meeting at Belmont Park carry out the proposed plan to open the infield free on June 21, which is done on occasions in England, it will do much to make racing even more democratic. The only danger will arise from the difficulty of properly policing such a big place.

It took the Giants to stop the flying Phillies, and at a time when the situation was critical to a degree. Charley Dooin and his men have been riding roughshod over all the other clubs in the league, and arrived at the Polo Grounds last Thursday full of confidence and so far in front that there was good reason for the "fans" to feel anxious. The Giants had been going none too well, but rose to the occasion in a way to prove their class, and by winning four straight games brought the Phillies back to the field, so to speak, and improved materially their own standing. They can now carry the fight through the Western circuit without the depressing feeling of an almost hopeless stern chase, which would have been the case if they had not brought the house of Dooin up with a round turn.

John Paul Jones, the brilliant runner of Cornell University, commands the admiration of all in the athletic world. His performance on Saturday at the intercollegiate games, on the eve of his graduation, was the crowning feature of a remarkable career on the cinder path and across country. He has now set the world's amateur record for one mile at 4:14 2-5, a mark which will be hard to displace. Abel Kiviat is about the only man who has even an outside chance to wipe his name off the books, and in all probability the record will be enduring. Jones has done much for the glory of himself and Cornell.

The athletes of the University of Pennsylvania have once more proved their speed, strength and agility, even without the guiding hand of Mike Murphy, or at least his close personal supervision. Their victory on Saturday was well deserved, and much credit also must go to Harvard for the way its team finished on the heels of the Quakers.

W. Heinrich Schmidt, the young golfer of Worcester, Mass., has made an impression on the links of two countries which will be lasting in fighting his way to the sixth round of the amateur championship tournament of Great Britain, and carrying Harold H. Hilton, a player of rare skill and long experience, who eventually won the title for the fourth time, to the nineteenth green of a bitterly fought match. It was no fluke, either. According to reports, Schmidt played sound golf, and it took a 25-foot put to bring about his defeat. He must be warmly congratulated for so ably representing this country on the links abroad and in commanding so much comment in England for his skill, courage and good sportsmanship. There is honor even in losing.

The first of the preliminary matches for the Dwight F. Davis lawn tennis cup between teams representing this country and Australia will be played on the West Side Club courts on Friday. Much depends on the outcome. The winners will go on to England in quest of the trophy so coveted in the lawn tennis world, and there is high hope here that this trophy will be returned to the country from which it sprung. The Australians must be beaten, of course, as a means to this end, and judging by their practice matches in this country this will prove no easy task. There is no Wilding or Brooks on the team, but the players who have travelled from the other side of the world are mighty well equipped. The advantage, if any, naturally lies with our own men, who will be playing on home courts and under conditions with which they are familiar. Apart from this, the team looks quite strong enough to beat the visitors at their best, and this happy condition is confidently anticipated.

Judging by the way Hackett and Little have been splitting up in two or three doubles matches the impression has gained strength that the committee is not altogether satisfied with their work together, and leads to the suggestion that Maurice E. McLoughlin may be asked to double up with one or the other and so carry much of the burden of the match. The national champion, who is strong, wiry and practically tireless, will be willing, no doubt, to play in three of the five matches if the full number should be necessary, but it strikes me that it would be asking a bit too much, although R. D. Wrenn and his associates on the committee are far better qualified than anybody else to pass judgment on this somewhat delicate question. It must not be forgotten, however, that individual skill does not make up for the lack of practice in team play in a doubles match.

It has not been my pleasure to see much of the polo practice this year, but a thoroughly good judge tells me that, in his opinion, the Englishmen will carry home the international cup. He expressed a willingness to wager a small sum, too, which proved that he had the courage of his convictions. So far as I can see the invaders are not much stronger than two years ago, when beaten in two straight matches. In all probability the Meadow Brook four will be the same which so successfully defended the cup in 1911. There is this difference, however: the members of the team—Harry Payne Whitney, Devereaux Milburn and the two Waterburys—have had far less practice together than two years ago—not enough, in fact, according to some critics, to insure their proving such a powerful combination. This, of course, is a matter of opinion, and while there is little or nothing on which to base a prediction, I have much confidence in the ability of Captain Whitney and his men to defend the cup in the same dashing way that marked their play on the previous invasion. Here again climatic conditions and a home field will operate against the challengers.

While a firm believer in taking sport seriously and giving full attention to all the little details so necessary in working up to top form, I could not help but admire the way in which the challengers and defenders have helped in providing the necessary practice for each other. It was refreshing to see Devereux Milburn playing against the English team, and Harry Payne Whitney acting as referee, while substitutes for both teams have been able to learn all there is to know about each other's play. This makes for good sportsmanship.

Williams College can boast of a baseball team that not only beat, but actually shut out, the wonderfully strong Yale nine on Tuesday in a game that, to all appearances, neither deserved to lose. Too much credit cannot be given to Hodge, the freshman pitcher from Williamstown, who stood up so manfully against a despairing Yale rally in the ninth inning and a perfect bedlam of cheers. He showed not only the skill but the nerve and composure of which great pitchers are made. Gile, who allowed only four hits and struck out thirteen men, has hardly pitched a better game this year for the Blue, but he had the misfortune of seeing two of these four hits bunched with a little loose play, which made all the difference between winning and losing, or at any case tieing and losing.

The crushing defeat which Williams suffered at the hands of Princeton earlier in the season is almost forgotten in the prestige gained by beating Yale, but in such a game the men of New Haven lost nothing. They played too well to suffer any in comparison with their worthy opponents. The defeat may turn out for the best, too, as Harvard looms up in a dangerous way, and the second Princeton game must be played. The strain of trying to maintain their unbroken string of seventeen victories may not have been apparent, but strain there must have been, and a momentary relaxation, without any discouraging features, is almost sure to make for good.

Hal Chase may or may not be missed by the Yankees, but it would be well to defer judgment until such time as Frank Chance has a fair opportunity to carry out his carefully laid plans to build up a winning team. Any change at this time looks for the best, as the Yankees are in a desperate condition.

The Tigers, as suggested a week ago, rose to the needs of the Yale game and carried their dearest rivals to ten innings before victory rested with the Blue. It must have been a good game to watch.

The college baseball season now has only two weeks to run, but there will be plenty of action before it comes to an end. Harvard has two important games this week, one with Williams, on Wednesday, and the second game with Brown, on Saturday. Yale, too, will be busy, as Holy Cross will be hard to beat on Wednesday, while the second game in the Princeton series will be played on Saturday at the home of the Tigers. In the week beginning June 16 the Yale-Harvard series will be the centre of interest.

Brown's victory over Harvard last week keeps the men from Providence second to Yale, a place not likely to be lost.

Willie Hoppe seems to be a Jake Schaefer, a Frank Ives and a George Slosson rolled in one. Truly he is a wizard of billiards, and his world's record average of 41 8-12 for a match game is likely to stand for years to come for other players to shoot at.

REDS BOW BEFORE RUBE AND GIANTS

Marquard Holds Tinker's Boys in Check While Teammates Bat Out Victory.

START IN FIRST INNING

A Few Sound Hits and an Error by Groh Give Visitors Enough Runs for the Game.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.]

Cincinnati, June 1.—Fifteen thousand persons saw Tinker's Cincinnati Reds go down to defeat before Rube Marquard and eight other Giants here this afternoon, at Redland Field, by a score of 4 to 1.

Marquard was supreme, outpitching his opponent, Gene Packard, in all spots, and especially in the pinches. When the Reds threatened at any point he clamped down the screws, while his teammates got to Packard in two of the nine innings, in which they were aided and abetted by one Heinie Groh, a former member of the New York club.

Tinker did not play. A spiked hand received in one of Saturday's games at St. Louis had become festered, and he was forced to send Bergammer to short field. Shafer romped around third, with Snodgrass in the centre garden for the Giants. In the second inning Burns and Murray changed fields, Burns going to right, the sun field.

The visiting team got real busy in the opening round, and when the smoke had cleared away had the game on ice, the two tallies proving enough to win. Burns, leading for the Giants, coaxed a pass out of Packard. Shafer bounced a hard one to Berghammer, and the latter's scoop to Groh forced Burns at second. The ex-Giant seemed to have plenty of time to get Shafer at first, but his throw went wide of the mark, and Shafer raced to second, whence he scored when Fleacher sent one out to centre to Devore. On the throw-in to catch Shafer at the plate Fletcher took second. He came right along home when Doyle sent a hot one into the centre garden. Larry became a little anxious to stretch the hit and was caught on the relay to the infield.

The Reds got busy in the first and second innings, but their chances were killed off in both instances. The Giants came near breaking through again in the third, when, after two were out, Fletcher sent a fly down near the right foul line, which went for a triple. He remained on third while Doyle lined to Bates, in right.

The Reds scored their only tally in the third, when, after one man was out, Devore smashed out his second safety and came romping home on a double by Bates to left. The rest of the round was easy for McGraw's men.

Neither side scored again until the seventh, when the Giants got a better hold on the game and pushed across another pair of tallies. Meyers got right busy in this round and smashed one through short for a single. Snodgrass was passed, then Marquard bunted and was safe, filling the bases. Burns came through with a long fly to Devore, and the Indian came across with a score. He was followed soon after by Snodgrass when Shafer singled. The latter was doubled up off first when Fletcher lined to Berghammer.

Only once in the remaining three rounds did the Reds get even a ghost of a show at the run column. Marquard tightened up wonderfully, and not a man connected safely.

PITCHING HONORS TO HALL

Shuts Out White Sox for Detroit in Hard Fought Game.

Chicago, June 1.—The Tigers defeated Chicago by a score of 1 to 0 in the final game of the series here to-day. Two bases on balls, a stolen base and a single gave them the game.

It was a pitchers' battle between Hall and Scott, the former holding the White Sox to four scattered hits. Scott received perfect support and pitched well in the pinches. Ty Cobb received word from Detroit that his wife was ill, and he left before the game started. High's one-handed catch of Easterly's long fly was a feature of the afternoon.

Hal Chase Lost to the Yankees; Traded to the Chicago White Sox

Chance Gets Zieder and Borton, Both Infielders, for Star First Baseman.

DICKER LONG THOUGHT OF

Manager of New York Team Gives Slump in Batting as Reason for Exchange of Peerless Hal.

Hal Chase has been lost to the Yankees. The player who has earned the name of being one of the greatest, if not the greatest, first basemen in baseball was traded yesterday to the Chicago White Sox for Rollie Zieder, an infielder, and Borton, who has had experience both at first base and in the outfield.

Frank Chance, the new manager of the team, made the announcement, and it came like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky. He said that after canvassing all the American League clubs Jimmy Callahan, manager of the White Sox, was the only one who seemed willing to give what he considered a fair equivalent for Chase.

The other clubs, he added, did not seem anxious to get Chase under any conditions or at any price. Chance explained further that while Chase was a great first baseman, he had fallen off so badly in his batting this year that some kind of a change seemed advisable, particularly as he was about the only player who could be used in what he considered a profitable exchange to strengthen the Yankees where more strength was absolutely needed, if a winning team was to be built up in the course of a year or two.

The infield of the New York team has been out of kilter for three or four years. Six or eight different players have been tried at short, third and second in an effort to get a combination that would work well and provide the defence so necessary if a pennant is to be won. The keystone sack in particularly has been a vulnerable point for years.

Frank Chance took over the managership of the team with little knowledge of his players, and it did not take him long to reach the conclusion, apart from the fact that the team has been consistently losing, that he must make some radical changes.

He long has had his eye on Zieder, whose play he admired in the series between the White Sox and the Cubs, and confidently believes that he will develop into a star. He said last night that in all probability he would use Zieder at second base, although he has played third or first for the White Sox. Borton may be tried in the outfield, as Chance says he will begin playing first base himself regularly against the Boston Red Sox this afternoon.

Zieder is a fast man on the bases and a reasonably strong hitter, particularly in the pinches. He played 129 games with the White Sox last year, scoring 57 runs and making 166 hits, including 12 two-baggers, 10 three-baggers and one home run. He made 24 sacrifice hits and stole 47 bases, while his batting average was .265. He played 29 games at first base, 39 games at third base and covered second and short in other contests.

Borton joined the White Sox late last fall and played 31 games, in which he made 39 hits for a batting average of .371. He played first base regularly this year until injured, when Fournier took his place and did so well that Callahan did not change back.

Zeider and Borton will report to Chance at the Polo Grounds to-morrow morning. Chase was notified of the deal yesterday and has been ordered by Calahan to report to the White Sox at once.

Hal Chase joined the Yankees in 1905 and quickly earned the name of being a star at first base. Four or five years ago he jumped the team when things were going badly, on the ground that he could not get along with "Kid" Elberfeld, the temporary manaker at that time. He was reinstated the following spring, and finally was appointed manager of the team in 1911, when George Stallings was released. He did not prove to be much of a success as a leader and went back to the ranks last year, when Harry Wolverton was engaged to handle the Yankees.

When Frank Chance signed a contract late last winter to take over the reins he tried to make a second baseman of Chase. An accident on the spring training trip in Bermuda, when he injured his ankle sliding to second base, deprived him of much needed practice, and when the season opened it quickly developed that he would not be a success at the bag, handicapped as he was by being a left-handed thrower.

Chase played in 131 games last year, for a batting average of .315, but this year he has been in more or less of a slump, so that his mark up to and including the games of last Thursday was only .224.

Zieder actually led the first basemen in individual fielding last season, but played in only twenty-nine games.

BROWNS A STUMBLING BLOCK TO THE NAPS

Cut Winning Streak of Nine Straight by Breaking Even in Double-Header.

Cleveland, June 1.—Winning the first game of to-day's double-header by a score of 6 to 1 gave the Cleveland Naps nine straight victories. But they lost the second game to St. Louis by a score of 9 to 3. A hard rain delayed the first game thirty minutes and made the diamond muddy. Gregg outpitched R. Mitchell all the way in the first game, keeping well scattered the six hits St. Louis gathered.

In the second contest Baumgardner was a puzzle, while St. Louis drove both Kahler and W. Mitchell from the box. Cleveland's six errors in the second game figured in the defeat.

After three weeks' absence from the game because of injuries to his hands, Lajoie went back to second base in the second game to-day.

WIN IN THE ELEVENTH

Indians Discount Knight's Homer by Hard Hits.

Newark downed Jersey City in an eleven inning thriller at home yesterday by the score of 3 to 2.

The score was a tie—1 to 1—when Jack Knight, the Jersey City second baseman, opened the eleventh inning with a home run over the left field fence. Jack Kelly boomed one toward the same spot, but it was short, and Billy Zimmerman, backing to the fence, caught it. The next two batters were easy, but Jersey City's one-run lead looked as good as twenty.

Bob Higgins, the first Newark man up, tripled to left, and Bill Collins, batting for Pitcher Bell, doubled to the same territory. Collins then started a steal of third, and Wells, trying to nail him, threw over Purtell's head and Collins came home.

The score follows:
