UPSTATE ELECTION COMMENT.

THE REAL TARGET.

From The Utica Press (Rep.).

It was Murphy, not McCall, who was beaten, and the decision was overwhelming on its face and in its forcefulness.

KEEP AT IT!

From The Troy Times (Rep.).

New York, having "downed" Tammany, should see that Tammany is kept down. The task is easily accomplished when the voters thoroughly make up their minds to stand together.

WHAT TO DO NOW.

From The Syracuse Herald (Ind.).

Now that Tammany is temporarily crushed, the duty of the anti-Tammany Democrats of New York is plain. No time should be lost in forming a rival Democratic organization in that city as a check upon Tammany's future blunders and excesses.

TIGER'S SLIMY TRAIL.

From The Watertown Times (Rep.).

There is no doubt but that the fear of Tammany affected all the elections in the state, even those purely local. The people wanted to get at the beast and kill it, even where its influences were most remote.

IDEALS OF GOVERNMENT.

From The Rochester Post-Express (Rep.).

Tammany is still a potent force in metropolitan politics and must be as long as her ideal of government primarily for the benefit of the organization and incidentally for the common good continues to be the ideal of a considerable minority in a vast and heterogeneous population.

"EMANCIPATION DAY."

From The Buffalo Courier (Dem.).

The result yesterday in the City of New York, in the city of Buffalo and throughout the state has demonstrated conclusively that Murphyism as a dominant power has had its doom. For the Democracy of the State of New York yesterday was a day of emancipation.

DEMOCRATIC REJOICING.

From The Utica Observer (Dem.).

New York is a Democratic city, and to the Democratic party, therefore, must be given no little credit for the overwhelming defeat piled upon Tammany. Murphyism is not Democracy, and the fight to rid him from using the great party for his own profit was as much the business of good Democrats as it was the affair of members of other parties.

YES, IF, BUT—

From The Buffalo Commercial (Rep.).

When Murphy, the silent, began to squirm and talk the faithful knew that he was preparing to walk through a slaughter house to an open grave. What Tammany will do with its beaten and discredited chief is a question, but if it has any regard for the will of the people it will throw him out of the 14th street wigwam without further ceremony.

HALF MILLION GIFT FOR COLLEGE OF COMMERCE

Pledged to Further Chamber's Educational Plan—Name of Giver Withheld.

$200,000 ALREADY RAISED

Proposed Building To Be Erected at 23d Street and Lexington Avenue Is to Contain Civic Museum.

The plan of founding a city College of Commerce received fresh impetus yesterday, when it was announced at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce that a member of the chamber had offered to provide $500,000 for a building.

The offer is made with the provision that the $200,000 already raised for the college shall be devoted to installing a commercial and civic museum in the proposed building, and that the city shall enter into a contract with the Chamber of Commerce to provide for the annual support of the college and the museum.

No difficulty is anticipated in obtaining the agreement of the city and the Chamber of Commerce to these provisions. The name of the man who made the offer has been withheld for the present at his request. There was much speculation among the members as to his identity. Most of them seemed to believe that it was Jacob H. Schiff.

Color was lent to this rumor later in the day by the remark of Mortimer L. Schiff, who said: "Nobody on the committee knows the name of the man except myself. I have promised not to tell until the adoption of the plan is definitely assured."

Mortimer Schiff was recently made chairman of the Chamber of Commerce's committee on commercial education, and he read the report yesterday in which the $500,000 gift was announced. Jacob H. Schiff, when asked whether he was the man who had promised the money, said with a smile: "Why, my son won't tell me the name of the man."

If the plan goes through the site of the College of Commerce will be at 23d street and Lexington avenue, where the City College formerly was situated.

It is planned that the college shall be governed by a board of trustees, to be elected jointly by the trustees of the College of the City of New York and the Chamber of Commerce.

The report of the chamber's committee on commercial education, which was presented yesterday, says that leading educators throughout the country have agreed that an institution of the collegiate type for commercial study is one of the prime necessities of New York. It has been pointed out that this country is far behind Germany in such institutions. The report continues:

"The college should, furthermore, provide continuation and evening classes, with well arranged and self-contained courses, available for those young men who are already employed, but who desire to extend their knowledge of commercial subjects. To the end that the greatest benefit might be secured from this department of the work, the co-operation of the merchants of this city should be secured, so that they would not only readily permit but actively encourage their younger employes to make use of the facilities thus extended. Much impetus would be given to the work of the college and its diplomas and certificates would be made more valuable if the members of the Chamber of Commerce would agree to give preference in employment to young men holding such diplomas or certificates. It is the hope of the committee on commercial education that if and when the college is established the chamber may place itself on record to that effect."

'PROM WEEK' IS CURTAILED

Yale Faculty Cuts Short Annual February Festivities.

New Haven, Conn., Nov. 6.—"Prom Week," the big social event of the year at Yale, will be considerably curtailed this year, as compared with former years, under orders issued to-day by Dean F. S. Jones, of the college, and Director R. H. Chittenden, of the Sheffield Scientific School, to the committee in charge of the affair.

The functions will begin on Monday of "Prom Week" in February and end at 4 o'clock on the following Wednesday morning. There will be no Saturday night entertainment, as heretofore, and no more dawn teas or other affairs of the sort. This action was taken, it is explained today, because of the conviction that the festivities had become too long drawn out.

CHANGE BY HAMMERSTEIN

He Will Produce Popular Priced Opera in English.

Oscar Hammerstein probably will confine his efforts at his Lexington Avenue Opera House this season to giving performances of opera in English at popular prices. He will in all probability defer his French and Italian opera seasons at $5 prices until next autumn. This means that he will devote his time this year to opera in opposition to the Century Opera Company.

His house, Mr. Hammerstein said last night, probably will be ready for performances in the early part of January. Mr. Hammerstein's change of plan makes it improbable that M. Renaud, Mme. Chenal, Mme. Bellonconi and the other French and Italian singers engaged by Mr. Hammerstein will appear here this season.

Mr. Hammerstein will give his English opera season with English speaking singers, Alice Gentle, Orville Harold, Edward Johnson and Henry Weldon among others.

"I am seriously considering putting off my French and Italian opera season in opposition to the Metropolitan until next fall," said Mr. Hammerstein last night. "This means that I shall devote my efforts this year, very probably, to performances of opera in English at popular prices.

"I intend to make my ensemble, my chorus and my orchestra as nearly perfect as it is possible to make them. Among my English speaking singers I shall have those of the first rank. I shall show the American public what it is possible to do with popular priced opera in English.

"My new Lexington Avenue Opera House probably will be ready early in January. The roof is now on, and the plasterers go to work to-morrow. If it were not for probable bad weather I could open before then. But when I do open I shall give New York opera in English that is opera in English."

"HOP O' MY THUMB" CAST.

William A. Brady, F. Ray Comstock and Morris Gest have completed the cast of principals for "Hop o' My Thumb," the pantomime from the Drury Lane Theatre, London, which will be presented at the Manhattan Opera House the latter part of this month. Iris Hawkins is announced to appear in the role of Hop, Albert Hart as the ogre, Billy McDermott as the king, Eva Fallon as Mirabel, Viola Gillette as Hilario, Flavia Arcaro as the witch, Smith and Austin as Tango and Trotter, Naomi Glass as Zaza, Charles M. Hinton as the woodcutter and Bertha Delmonte as Fairy Forget-Me-Not. A feature of the production will be the De Sierries troupe of fifty living statues, from London.

"THE HONEY BEE" SWARMS

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.]

Atlantic City, Nov. 6.—A new comedy, "The Honey Bee," by Hutcheson Boyd and Rudolph Bunner, had its first production here to-night by Harrison Grey Fiske. The piece presents a phase of the feminist movement, though no attempt is made to point a moral or pen a satire. The company includes Allan Pollock, Fanny Hartz, Marie Chambers, Eugene A. Hohenwart, Benjamin Kauser, Marion Pullar and the Millington children, Norris and Helen. The comedy is scheduled for an early New York opening.

THEATRICAL NOTES.

Sydney Blow, co-author with Douglas Hoare of the English version of "Oh, I Say!" the farce now being presented in musical form at the Casino Theatre, arrived in New York for an indefinite stay yesterday. "Oh, I Say!" in legitimate dramatic form is still running at the Criterion in London, and Mr. Blow says it is his intention to continue it there until next February, when he will open, at the same theatre, the musical version of "Oh, I Say!" using the score by Jerome Kern.

Theodore Friebus is to return to the management of William Fox, opening at the Academy of Music November 17 as Svengali in "Trilby."

William Hurlbut, author of "The Strange Woman," the new comedy which Klaw & Erlanger will present at the Lyceum Theatre Monday, leaves for Boston to-day, where he will address the Drama League at the invitation of Professor Baker, of Harvard University, and see the final performances there of "The Strange Woman" at the Park Theatre.

Rehearsals have begun for the star cast which Joseph Brooks will present in "The New Henrietta," the new comedy by Winchell Smith and Victor Mapes, based upon Bronson Howard's famous comedy. William H. Crane, Douglas Fairbanks, Amelia Bingham and Patricia Collinge are among the cast.

Harry Carroll, the young composer of popular songs, will appear as a single entertainer at Hammerstein's next week.

"Bunny," the clown colt of the Hippodrome, is now in the hospital being treated for a mild form of equine dyspepsia caused by his eating a grass mat colored with poisonous dyes. The veterinary promises to have him out in a day or so.

THE BOSTON ORCHESTRA

A Virtuoso Band's Appeal for Appreciation.

Possibly there was a note of pride under the apparent modesty of the programme of the first of this season's concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which took place last night in Carnegie Hall. No solo feature; no new music. Only the band and its leader to assert their right to a hearing in a city which from one point of view is more than amply provided with orchestral music of its own making, and a list of pieces which do not gain in beauty or significance when made the vehicle of conductors' whims that never entered the heads of their composers, but whose varied charms, like those of all good compositions, bring a new refreshment when given perfect expression. The Boston orchestra's capacity for making such a proclamation has been demonstrated over and over again for a longer time than the majority of its patrons in the metropolis now have sat under its ministrations. Some of those patrons have grown old in years with it, but their appreciation has been kept fresh by its playing even as its voice has been perennially rejuvenated by a wise business and artistic administration. Its career has been marked by changes, but not by decay, and its performances must remain vital and vigorous so long as they are directed by such genuinely recreative musicians as Dr. Muck.

A perfect understanding and complete sympathy exist between the orchestra and its patrons, and so last night's concert was one of those incidents of the musical season which are sufficiently described when the record of their occurrence is made. Those who heard it will not need to be reminded of how the music sounded, and to those who did not, any attempt at description would sound like hyperbole. The list of pieces was singularly put together, and the purposes of the selections and their arrangement can scarcely be guessed. The first part of the evening was filled with Beethoven's Symphony in A major. Then, after a pause of ten minutes, there followed Brahms's "Tragic" overture, Liszt's "Préludes" and the overture to "The Flying Dutchman"—a decided decrescendo, no doubt, in some minds. If Liszt's symphonic poem was chosen to disclose the brilliancy of the orchestra's tone and the virtuosoship of its players, it might be said that those qualities had ample and more dignified illustration in the symphony, especially in its last movement, which had a performance quite without a fellow, in this reviewer's memory. But the glistering tinsel was at least a foil for the sombre fabric of the Brahms music, and enabled Wagner's overture to assume a noble dignity. The audience filled every seat in the room, and the music filled it with enthusiasm.

WITHERSPOON IN RECITAL

French, Irish and English Songs Given at Aeolian Hall.

It was an exceedingly interesting programme that Mr. Herbert Witherspoon offered his admirers at his annual concert yesterday afternoon. Mr. Witherspoon's admirers are many, apparently too many for the proportions of Aeolian Hall, for they quite filled it, and there were those who even failed to obtain seats. Perhaps the chief interest of the afternoon came near the close with the group of old French, Irish and English songs. The old English, "The Twelve Days of Christmas," was most delightful and novel, being a folk composition built on the form of such ballads as "The House That Jack Built," and though there were twelve stanzas of it, each stanza was more delightful than the one preceding. Then there was the Irish, "The Kerry Cow," sung with rich humor by Mr. Witherspoon, and the French, "Le Beau Séjour" and "Le Repos." Mr. Witherspoon deserves the thanks of all who are interested in the history of popular song for these interpretations.

The popular bass since his connection with the Metropolitan Opera Company has steadily grown in the depth of understanding of his art, a fact which was abundantly evident in his singing of the group of German lieder. His voice is not perhaps one of surpassing natural beauty, but his intelligence, his feeling and the skilful use of it have made him one of the few American singers capable of interpreting songs divorced from opera. And this, after all, is an art vouchsafed to few of those who stir the masses with the aid of the often fictitious surroundings of the more popular branch of music. In conclusion, a special word of praise should be given to Mr. Witherspoon's most excellent diction.

PAVLOWA BECOMES PROSAIC

Dancer a Witness in Action to Recover Money.

Anna Pavlowa, the Russian dancer, was a witness in the City Court yesterday in a supplementary examination on a judgment obtained by Dorothy E. Aldman, also a dancer, against the Max Rabinoff Enterprises, which was assigned to Pavlowa. The examination was to ascertain the assets of Rabinoff's corporation.

An effort was also made to trace $5,000 which Pavlowa paid to the Max Rabinoff Enterprises as a forfeit when she failed to fill a contract made while she was in England in 1911. Pavlowa testified that she paid the $5,000 to a brother-in-law of Rabinoff, but had no idea what was done with it.

DANIEL J. O'REILLY DIES

Former Counsel for Thaw Succumbs to Complications.

Daniel J. O'Reilly, who gained prominence as a criminal lawyer through his connection with the trials of Harry K. Thaw, Nan Patterson and Captain Hains, died yesterday at his home at No. 19 West 139th street, from a complication of diseases. Mr. O'Reilly was at one time an Assistant District Attorney. He was convicted on May 24, 1911, of receiving stolen property and was sentenced to five months in the penitentiary. His sentence was affirmed on appeal in 1912, and O'Reilly went to jail.

The conviction was the outcome of the robbery of Aaron Bancroft, an aged banker. Securities valued at $85,000 were stolen from him while he was going to place them in a safe deposit box in the Produce Exchange. The thieves engaged O'Reilly and delivered to him $65,000 of the securities, which O'Reilly kept from their owners until $5,000 was paid.

O'Reilly held that he was acting as counsel for William Sullivan when he and Frank Piass, who turned state's witness, took a taxicab ride with counsel for the Bancrofts, in the course of which the $5,000 was received by Piass.

O'Reilly was retained in many criminal cases that received prominence, among them that of Harry K. Thaw. He defended Nan Patterson, who was tried for the murder of Cæsar Young, and Captain Hains for the murder of William Annis.

O'Reilly was born in New York City in 1869. He was a graduate of the College of the City of New York, Seton Hall College and the Columbia Law School. He was admitted to the bar in 1892.

O'Reilly testified in supplementary proceedings in 1909, that he had received about $40,000 from the Thaw family. He swore that he had spent the money and had pawned his jewelry.
