REVIEW OF 567 DAYS' SESSION

Second Longest Congress Term in History of Country.

SUMMARY OF CHIEF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Proceedings Occupy 19,000 Pages in Congressional Record, Bulkiest Ever Printed.

[From The Tribune Bureau.]

Washington, Oct. 24.—In length of actual service the 63d Congress, up to the present time, has established a record which almost equals that of the 40th Congress, which remained in continuous session from March 4, 1867, to November 10, 1868, a period of 619 days. The present Congress began its labors on April 7, 1913, at the call of President Wilson, and has been at work ever since, the extraordinary session merging into the first regular session on December 1, a period of 567 days.

Physical evidence of the assiduity of Congress is presented by nearly 19,000 pages of "The Congressional Record," which, in bulk, exceeds that of any previous Congress.

The important legislation, reflecting the policies of the Democratic administration, enacted during these 567 days may be summarized under the following heads:

Among the measures mentioned in the Democratic platform which have been shunted aside or upon which no action has been taken are:

National direct primaries.
Rural credits.
Limitation of campaign contributions.
Constitutional amendment limiting the tenure of office of a President to a single term.
Creation of a council of national defence.
Reorganization of the civil services.

The achievements of the present Congress are not confined to the legislative field. Changes have occurred which distinguish it to some extent from previous Congresses. The practice of holding a joint session of the two houses to hear messages presented by the President in person was revived. This ceremony reflects to some extent the greater influence that is now exerted by the President upon Congress.

President Wilson addressed the joint sessions of the Senate and House eight times during the extraordinary and regular sessions of the 63d Congress. His addresses during the extra session were on the tariff, currency and Mexico; and during the session just closed on trusts, Panama Canal tolls, Mexico and emergency revenue legislation. The President also delivered his annual message in person at the opening of the regular session.

CONGRESS ENDS LONG SESSION

said he probably would be unable to serve, in which event a substitute member will be named by the Speaker.

When the two bodies convened today adjournment seemed impossible, as Mr. Henry was obdurate in his demands for cotton currency legislation. Mr. Underwood suggested that the House recess for two hours, "in the hope that some agreement about adjournment may be reached." During the recess forty Southern Democrats congregated in the office of Representative Adamson, of Georgia, and their efforts were bent toward calling off Mr. Henry, who was leading a forlorn hope.

The Texan insurgent finally agreed with the odds against him to consent to an adjournment resolution by not making a point of no quorum, provided the sentiment of his own colleagues dictated such a course. The conference was overwhelmingly against further obstruction, and Mr. Henry reluctantly promised to yield upon the reconvening of the House. No trouble was expected in the Senate.

At 2 o'clock the House reconvened, and after Mr. Henry's request for unanimous consent to recess, instead of to adjourn, was refused, the House voted 56 to 27, to go home at 4 o'clock. In a closing speech Mr. Henry said he did not yield his strategic position as to cotton legislation in December. When the House reconvenes the first thing in order will be the Glass currency law amendments, to which Mr. Henry has offered an amendment for the advance by the federal government of $250,000,000 on the South's cotton crop.

Asserting that he realized the impossibility of obtaining action now, Mr. Henry said:

"We are simply transferring our right from the House to the people and my cotton relief bill goes over to the next session enjoying an admirable parliamentary status. The very moment our Southern Representatives return to Washington at the opening of Congress we will gird up our loins and open up the most vigorous fight for the relief to which our people are entitled under this bill.

"It is absolutely certain that a quorum of the House and Senate cannot be brought back to Washington until after the November elections. Hence it is futile to undertake legislation when there is positively no chance for us to secure a quorum of both houses. The President so far has failed to agree to the bills that have been proposed. Yet we feel sure that he is ready to do his full duty as he sees it in regard to the situation.

"My positive knowledge is that Congress will be reconvened in extraordinary session about the middle of November. That being the case, it will be a little more than three weeks until we can again begin our contest in the House of Representatives. The highly important thing to impress upon the country now is that the people should express to their Representatives their wishes in regard to this farreaching and beneficial legislation."

In the conference which preceded the agreement to adjourn Mr. Henry hotly resented intimations that he was opposing the administration in his filibuster.

"I worked ten times harder for the election of Woodrow Wilson than I have worked in the present situation," he said.

Feeling that Mr. Henry may have been the victim of hasty criticism, the Southern Democrats adopted a vote of thanks for the fight he had made in the interests of the cotton growers.

HANNAH ELIAS DODGES SHERIFF

Warned by 'Phone Operator of His Coming, She Locks Her Door.

Mrs. Hannah Elias, who about ten years ago was sued by the late John R. Platt, a glass manufacturer, for the return of property valued at $685,000, which he alleged she extorted from him, was "not at home" yesterday when Deputy Sheriff Kluberdanz called there to execute a judgment for $723.

Mrs. Elias lives on the top floor of the apartment house 501 West 113th st., which is one of her numerous properties. The judgment against her was obtained by Peter F. Willig, a plumber, for a bathtub installed in her home. When Kluberdanz called at the Elias house yesterday the telephone boy informed him that Mrs. Elias was not at home, but the deputy sheriff decided to go up to her apartment. As he started up he heard the telephone operator call the apartment and inform some one there that the deputy sheriff was coming up. So when the agent of the law rang the bell at the door of the Elias home there was no answer.

When Kluberdanz got back to the Sheriff's office with the execution unexecuted he found there a stay of execution, signed by Justice Schmuck, of the City Court, so that his disappointment turned to pleasure at not having found Mrs. Elias at home.
