MAGDALEN HOME TROUBLE LAID TO TAMMANY SPITE

Superintendent Ousted for Favoring Mills Bill, She Says.

TELLS OF THREATS FROM COURT AID

Mrs. Friedman Declares Her Humane Treatment of Girls Was Opposed.

A plot to drive her out of prison and social betterment work, aimed against her by Tammany politicians because of her alleged support of the Mills bill to reform the inferior criminal courts, was one of the causes given yesterday by Mrs. Antonia Friedman for her abrupt dismissal as superintendent of the Magdalen Home, in Dyckman Street.

Coupled with this, she said, was the opposition within the board of directors of the institution to her employment in the home of Thomas Mott Osborne prison reform methods.

"Up until a few weeks ago," she said at her home, 39 East Tenth Street, "I was a probation officer attached to the Children's Court. One day Frank Smith, chief clerk of the Court of Special Sessions, sent for me and accused me of working for the inferior criminal courts bill.

"He said that if the bill passed, he and a number of other of the attachés of the court and Judge Mayo would be out of their jobs. He told me to stop my activities, but I told him I knew nothing about the bill. He sent for me later a second time and said, 'I'll get you if you don't stop working for that bill.'

"Two days later eighteen of my probation case records disappeared, and later two of them were put back with entries changed. There was one case, that of Clarence Kyle, for which I made up from memory the entries for the month of January for the reason that it was due for report to the court.

"Then suddenly charges were brought against me of falsifying the records, conduct unbecoming an officer and other things. I was taken sick from the shock with nervous prostration. My sister can tell you what happened next."

Her sister, Lydia Krause, said that Smith sent for Mrs. Friedman's badge, and she went to see him to explain that Mrs. Friedman was sick, and she did not want to search among her belongings for the badge.

"Mr. Smith said the matter was not serious," Miss Krause said, "and that my sister could beat them with a good lawyer. He said the board had brought the charges against his will. I saw him next day and he was very different. He said my sister had grown too big for her job and was trying to run the entire court.

"When I asked him who stole the records he appeared much embarrassed and said nobody stole them, and admitted that he had the Mackay case, one of the records which had disappeared, in his office. He said my sister was not on trial for that, but for the Kyle case."

Mrs. Friedman then took up the story and said that after she recovered from her illness she did not feel strong enough to go on fighting the opposition to her, and resigned as probation officer, and the charges against her were withdrawn.

"There was a strict understanding," she said, "that I was to be left alone. Two weeks later Mrs. James Bronson Reynolds, president of the Magdalen Home, appointed me as superintendent, with the understanding that I was to in the statement yesterday that the sole reason for Mrs. Friedman's dismissal was her humane methods among the girls, such as Mr. Osborne has put in force at Sing Sing.

"Shortly after that a woman agent of the Tammany people in Special Sessions came to Mrs. Reynolds and other members of the board of directors of the home and told them that I was unfit to be in charge there and that there were eighteen charges pending against me in the Children's Court. The Mills bill, you know, separates the Children's Court from Special Sessions and takes a lot of patronage away from the politicians.

"Mrs. Reynolds told me about it, and we disproved all the statements made against me. She was my friend and believed in me. But shortly afterward she was taken sick and went to Richmond, Va. She has not been gone ten days, and now I am fired out."

Mrs. George W. Ely, vice-president, in charge during Mrs. Reynolds's absence; Mrs. Herbert A. Scheftel, second vice-president, who has been in active charge during Mrs. Ely's absence, and Miss Janet Macconachie, assistant superintendent and head nurse, concurred charge was her lack of discipline and friction with the rest of the staff.

"Mrs. Friedman has made so many untrue statements," Mrs. Ely said, "that we must say something, although the incident is closed now and all is tranquil at the home. The situation was thus: I was confronted by the alternative of asking Mrs. Friedman to resign or of seeing the entire staff leave us. It was simply a personal matter between the staff and Mrs. Friedman.

As soon as Mrs. Friedman left the girls began to get mutinous, and at dinner time the revolt broke out. Ten of the girls were arrested. From their cells at Jefferson Market they sent this letter yesterday afternoon to Mrs. Friedman:

"Dear Mrs. Friedman: Most likely you have seen in the papers of the riot up at the Magdalen Home. Now, Mrs. Friedman, we are down here just heartbroken. But if we could hear from you or see you in night court on Tuesday night, why, it will cheer us up a great deal. When you were taken away from us we felt like we were losing our mother. You will be surprised when you hear who they are holding as ringleader. Love from your poor lost children, Lena Resnikoff, Marion Bennet, May Kelly, Helen Walker, Mary Auston, Mildred Strang, Mollie Stern, Esther Meyers, Kitty Grimm, also Evelyn Wilson. All for your dear sake."

RAE TANZER TURNS ON J. W. OSBORNE

Is Now Convinced, Her Lawyer Says, That He Is Oliver.

SLIP IN COURT REVEALS SECRET

Was Overwrought and Nervous When She Admitted "Honest Mistake."

Miss Rae Tanzer tripped in her testimony yesterday afternoon and made a statement which revealed the amazing fact that she still believes James W. Osborne to be her missing Oliver. A month ago she withdrew her suit against him for breach of promise, on the ground that she had been mistaken.

She was a witness at the trial of Franklin D. Safford for perjury. Safford was the clerk at the hotel in Plainfield who identified James W. Osborne as the man who accompanied Miss Tanzer there last October.

Benjamin Slade, counsel for Safford, produced a letter and a photograph.

"Who wrote 'Answer soon' on this envelope?" he asked Miss Tanzer.

"The gentleman who was with me that evening."

"Is that the gentleman who is represented in this picture?"

"Yes."

The photograph was that of James W. Osborne.

Few in the courtroom realized the significance of this statement, as it was buried under a mass of evidence which was all in accord with Miss Tanzer's position that James W. Osborne was not the man.

To Harold Spielberg, her lawyer, however, it was no surprise.

"It's what I've been afraid of for two weeks," he admitted last night. "Miss Tanzer is convinced now that James W. Osborne is the man she knew last fall. Shall I drop the case? No, I'll stand by her as long as she tells the truth. That is what I counselled her in the beginning, to tell the truth at any cost."

It was evident to those who talked to her two weeks ago that Miss Tanzer was confused about James W. Osborne. In one sentence she would say he was not the man. In the next she accused him directly. She haunted the building where he has his office; she went to the Sherman Square Hotel where he lives; she stood around the doors of clubs where she thought she might catch a glimpse of him—all in the hope of settling definitely her own doubt.

James W. Osborne did not give her a chance to see him. The first time she has seen him since the day she recanted her original statement was in the courtroom on Wednesday. When she recanted, it was because she saw James W. Osborne, a stooping, tired-faced man. Her Oliver never stooped. It was that more than anything else, she said, in her moments of doubt afterward, that made her doubt him.

She was overwrought nervously and frightened at the machinery of the Federal Court which she had started whirling about her. After she went to Atlantic City and recovered her health she began to realize that a stooping position was only a little thing to determine the identity of a man.

One night, at the home of a friend, several prominent lawyers and psychologists, who are familiar with the personal appearance and habits of James W. Osborne, questioned the girl. Under their adroit lead it soon became apparent that the picture she was harboring in her mind was extraordinarily like the James W. Osborne they knew professionally.

Last night Miss Tanser refused to discuss the turn affairs have taken.

She maintained that when she identified the photograph of James W. Osborne as that of the man who was with her, it was a slip of the tongue; all she really meant was that it looked very much like him. She only consented to testify at all, she said, because she was so sorry for poor Mr. Safford, whom she had involved in so much trouble. She was allowed the privilege of answering only such questions as she believed would not incriminate her.

"I want to tell the truth," she said, "but I cannot answer on advice of counsel."

James W. Osborne stood up in court, leaning forward and listening intently. The court listened breathlessly as the tiny witness looked straight at him and gave the following description of the man who was with her in Plainfield:

"He was tall. He was well built. He had blue eyes. His hair was gray. He had large cheekbones and a very quick manner."

Senator O'Gorman Refuses Suffrage Plea, But Poses for Picture with Fair Pleaders

Senator O'Gorman facing Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain and Mrs. William Colt as he told a delegation from the Congressional Union that he would not vote for the Federal amendment for woman suffrage.

Opposed to Change in Federal Constitution, He Says, and Several Delegates "Boo"—Women's Words Convey Threats for Future.

Senator James A. O'Gorman will be photographed with the suffragists—he deems it a great pleasure to be associated with the ladies—but so long as he sits in the United States Senate he will not, unless his constituents force him to it, use his vote to enfranchise the sex. So much the Congressional Union found out yesterday, when two hundred of its members called upon him at his office at 37 Wall Street.

The Democratic Senator took his stand upon states' rights and admonished the suffragists not to seek to disturb "that great landmark, the Constitution." They were, he told them, overhasty in demanding freedom. They ought to remember that what is good for Utah may not be good for New York. They ought to reflect that while not actually casting the ballot in New York they had powerful influence. The delegation, led by Miss Alice Paul, Mrs. William Prendergast, Mrs. Henry Bruere, Mrs. William Colt, Mrs. Elden Bisbee, Mrs. Henry Butterworth, Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain, Mrs. Crystal Eastman Benedict, Miss Doris Stevens, Mrs. Edward Livingston Hunt, Mrs. John Rogers, jr., and Mrs. Talbot Perkins, accepted the turndown gracefully, except that some excitable ones in the crowd could not be restrained from booing when Mr. O'Gorman made his remark about indirect influence.

Previous to calling upon the Senator at 4 o'clock the Suffragists held a meeting in front of the Sub-Treasury Building. A huge crowd of men and boys heard Mrs. Bruere and Mrs. Jessie Hardy Stubbs make speeches. A brass band played tunes until it decided to consider itself overworked.

Liquid refreshments, however, revived the band, and it consented to accompany the procession to 37 Wall Street.

Headed by Miss Janet Burns and Miss Matilda Spence, carrying a huge banner, inscribed "Will Senator O'Gorman Vote for the Federal Amendment This Year?" the women marched into the office building between lines of curious stenographers and messenger boys. They were admitted to Senator O'Gorman's office, where they had not long to wait. Almost instantly the door opened and the portly Senator walked in.

"I am glad to see you, ladies," he said, with a smile.

The talkfest opened at once. Everybody stood, though Mrs. Boissevain pressed the host to sit down in the armchair at his elbow. "We'd all be much more comfortable if you would, and we'd feel it perfectly courteous," she said. He replied that he would prefer Mrs. Boissevain to take the chair. It remained unoccupied.

Mrs. Colt, acting as chairman, in rapid succession introduced Miss Stevens, Mrs. Rogers, Mrs. Prendergast, Mrs. Benedict and Mrs. Boissevain, each of whom made a brief speech. Miss Stevens told the Senator that the suffragists remembered very pleasantly how, as a member of the steering committee, he had voted to create a majority woman suffrage committee.

"This," she told him, "is the first of a nation-wide series of deputations to enlist the help of our statesmen in securing the passage in the 64th Congress of the national suffrage amendment."

Mrs. Prendergast asked Senator O'Gorman why woman suffrage should be a matter of geography. It was, she said, incongruous for a President of the United States to listen with the respect which the ballot commands to the women of one section of the country and ignore the opinions of another section. Mrs. Boissevain laid down the principle that when anybody wanted very much to do a thing he did it.

Then came Mrs. Benedict, who alone of all the speakers awoke a flash of interest in Mr. O'Gorman's unresponsive face.

"I appeal to you as a woman to a man," she said. "If the men of this country compel the women to win suffrage state by state, to work on and on like an athlete overstrained, condemned to unnecessary, racking tests, if you force us to do this when Congress might set us free, I say you are going to create a bitterness between men and women which it will take years to overcome."

Mrs. Benedict warned the Senator that the suffragists would not fail to use the means at their command—the power of the women voters in the West.

"Now," said Mrs. Colt, "Senator O'Gorman has been very patient in listening to us, and I think we ought to give him a chance to talk."

"I am glad that I have had the opportunity of listening to your eloquent presentation of your views," the Senator told his visitors, "but I cannot respond to your call. I am unalterably opposed to changes in the Federal Constitution. The sole effect of the proposed amendment would be to force woman suffrage on states that are opposed to it. Why do you abandon the method by which you have secured eleven states? Those states have adopted it without compulsion, and why deprive other states of the same privilege?

"Remember, what is good for a Western state, with a sparse population, may not be desirable for New York. You who are here represent a large and influential element, but I could assemble in another room an equal number of women who do not desire the ballot."

When he added that the women before him were too hasty in demanding the ballot, Mrs. Boissevain fired up. "I don't believe anybody under this broad sky can be too hasty in demanding freedom," she said.

"Would you have the white women beg the black men of the South for freedom?" demanded another woman.

Then Mrs. Colt called a halt on the heckling, and the Senator was invited to be photographed with the ladies, to which he agreed smilingly. Miss Paul, chairman of the Congressional Union, stated after leaving that the interview was very satisfactory. Senator O'Gorman had indicated at one point that if New York indicated a strong desire for the enfranchisement of its women he would obey. This, she said, was all they could hope for.

CITY'S MEDICAL EXAMINER SOON SOLVES MURDER CASE

Police, Coroner and High Officials Proceed Along Well-Beaten Trail Until Telephone Clears Doubt as to How Unfortunate Woman Died.

A "murder" case was solved in New York City yesterday. Since it was considered a mysterious murder from the time the body of a woman later identified as Mrs. Ernestine Heldman, thirty-eight, of West New York, N. J., was found in a shanty on Lenox Oval, a baseball field, at Lenox Avenue and 145th Street, until the autopsy was performed by Dr. Otto Schultz, New York County's first medical examiner, it is befitting the facts be recorded from the beginning.

Walter Dooley, eighteen years old, caretaker of the ball field, was appealed to by a woman outside the shanty about 9 o'clock yesterday morning. She mumbled that she was sick. It was raining, and her appearance was so wretched that Dooley told her to go into the shanty until the weather cleared. He went about his work on the field, returning to the building about an hour later.

Dooley was startled to find the woman dead. He ran to the Dolphin Hotel, the doors of which open into the ball field, and told employes of the circumstance, and they notified Patrolman James Mahan.

Then things proper to all murder mysteries in good standing began to happen. First was the arrival of Acting Captain Cooper, of the 4th Branch Detective Bureau, with five detectives. Inspector Faurot and a corps of official photographers and finger print experts were given a clear road from Police Headquarters in a large touring car with the large "P. D." displayed conspicuously on the hood. Coroner Hallenstein came next, with his physician. Assistant District Attorney Deacon Murphy next made his appearance with the county medical examiner.

A careful examination was made. No marks of violence were in evidence. Photographs were taken, finger prints looked for and Dooley was sought. He had gone. A search was made for him by two detectives. They learned that he had gone to his home, at 242 West 143d Street, and changed his clothes. More detectives were sent for him. He was found on the opposite corner from the hotel, standing idly by to see what was happening.

The customary third degree next was flashed on the film, Deacon Murphy administering it to Dooley.

More mystery and scurrying around by detectives. They scurried until they found Rudolph Glick, a friend of Dooley's. Long brown hair, similar to the dead woman's, was found entwined around a button of his coat. More mystery, and a hurrying out of more detectives. They returned with three young girls and another man. No names given out.

Then came a lapse of more than an hour, with no outside signs of activity. It was broken by Deacon Murphy, who, accompanied by Inspector Faurot, came downstairs and said: "From every indication now there has been a murder committed. There is much to be cleared up. For instance, our investigation so far shows that the unidentified woman was registered in this hotel with a man as 'Mr. and Mrs. Thompson.' They were in room 12 and came here about 1 o'clock this morning. The door of the room was locked from the inside. The whereabouts of the man is not known to us.

"The woman evidently left the room by way of the window and down a back stairs to the ball park. We expect to get 'Thompson,' and, in addition to his arrest, two more will be arrested as material witnesses. The fact that there were no marks of violence does not, of course, mean that the woman was not murdered. She may have been given 'knockout drops.'"

A telephone bell interrupted Mr. Murphy. He went to the instrument. This was heard:

"Yes, yes, this is Mr. Murphy. What? Pneumonia, you say? Are you sure?

"Well, well, what do you think of that?" he said as he hung up the receiver. "It was Dr. Schultz who called up to say the autopsy showed death was due to pneumonia."

Late last night a brother of the woman identified the city. He said her husband, Charles, a plumber, had not lived with her for several years and had lost track of her.

MAY BAIL MRS. WALTERS

Justice Admits He's Moved by Plea for Unborn Child.

Mrs. Ida Sniffen Walters, indicted for the murder of her two children last December, will probably soon be admitted to bail. This was the intimation of Justice Brady, in The Bronx County Supreme Court, yesterday, when a motion to dismiss the indictment was made by her counsel, Abraham Levy.

"It would imperil both the life of the prisoner and of her unborn child," he told the court, "if she should be forced to remain in the jail much longer."

Justice Brady stated that he viewed the case from the standpoint of humanity and would be glad to consider a motion to admit the woman to bail.

"While she is under indictment for murder," he said, "we must look upon the humane side of the case as well as the legal. It is a very sad matter, not only to those who have been connected with it in an official capacity, but also to the whole community, which I believe almost unanimously sympathizes with the prisoner."

Commenting upon the determination of Rogers to marry Mrs. Walters as soon as his wife, Mrs. Caroline Giddings Rogers, obtains a divorce from him, Justice Brady said this would be an act of humanity and an honorable amend.

The justice set May 4 as the date of the hearing, and suggested that an attempt be made to obtain Surrogate Schultz's courtroom for the trial. He also asked that an appeal be made to have a justice assigned to the case and for a courtroom, if the Surrogate's could not be had.

NEW COURTHOUSE IN SIGHT AT LAST

City Grants Permission to Take Title to Needed Property May 6.

The new Courthouse is at last to be realized. The board's committees on city plan and on corporate stock budget granted yesterday the application of the Courthouse Board to invest title on May 6 to the property to be acquired for the building.

It was decided, however, to leave the vesting of the title of St. Andrew's Church, at the corner of Duane Street and City Hall Place, until the committee could consult with Cardinal Farley and some arrangement be made, either to leave the church where it is or to move it to some other location in the neighborhood. The site for the Courthouse, with some additional property now provided for, just north of the Municipal Building, was previously determined.

Controller Prendergast raised the only dissenting voice. Although the Controller voted for the original site and the additional site, he voted against taking title apparently as a matter of "urgent economy" at this time. The Controller said last night that if he could find a way to block the project he would do it. He expressed doubt, however, as to whether anything could be done, as the Legislature made it mandatory upon the city to erect the building.

In explaining his objections the Controller said that many things had happened since he favored the project, and that he voted against it now because he did not believe the Board of Estimate had any clear understanding of the cost.

"It is proposed to sell the property that is not needed," said Mr. Prendergast. "Assuming that the cost of the original site is $7,000,000 and the cost of the additional site $5,000,000, the total is $12,000,000, and I do not believe the city will be able to sell the property not required at a figure that will hold the needed site at less than $9,000,000. I do not believe that any of the site can be sold to advantage until after the Courthouse is built."

The recommendations adopted authorizing the vesting of title also recommended that the layout of the site by the Courthouse Board be approved, that the President of the Borough of Manhattan be requested to take the necessary steps for the construction of temporary roadways within the site, and that the Bureau of Franchises be directed to enter into negotiations with the railroad corporations for the shifting of their tracks from Worth and Centre streets to other streets.

OUR VARIETY SHOW
No. 6: $20 and $22

With the close of our Variety Show—this week devoted to illustrating in our windows day by day the wide Variety of suits we offer at various prices, we are glad to wind up with the $20 and $22 goods.

In the rapid expansion of our business we sometimes fear that some of our old friends, accustomed to buying suits from us at about these figures, may have felt that because of the emphasis laid on the higher priced goods, we were neglecting the more modest prices.

Of course we are proud of the fact that with the improved style and finish which years have brought to our product, we have had a steadily increasing demand for our goods from men who have been paying custom tailors much more than we need ask.

For such men we have combed the markets of the world for the finest woolens obtainable, have searched for exclusive patterns, and have achieved results.

But in our progress toward the day when all men who can afford the finest woolens will look to clothiers of our sort, we have never forgotten the great body of our staunch friends who look to us for service and value—for first rate suits which they can depend on at prices like $20 and $22.

We give them the Value and besides that we offer such wide Variety as we are showing to-day.

Everything men and boys wear.

Sporting goods at all four stores.
