FLIES FOR $5,000 TROPHY

McCulloch Covers 440 Miles and Leads in Endurance Test.

[By Telegraph to The Tribune.]

Penn Yan, N. Y., Oct. 10.—David H. McCulloch, of Newport, Penn., leads the endurance test being held for the Curtiss $5,000 aviation trophy, having made ten round trips between Hammondsport and Penn Yan to-day, covering 440 miles. The flight was under the supervision of the Aero Club of America, which had a timekeeper at each end of Keuka Lake, over which the flight was made.

Glenn Curtiss has offered a $5,000 silver trophy to the aviator owning a Curtiss machine who flies the most miles in any ten-hour day. The time expires on October 30, when the Aero Club will make the award.

McCulloch's average speed was sixty-one miles an hour, and he flew at an average height of 4,000 feet.

"Hitch your wagon to a star"
Wrote Emerson, but, say
He didn't know about the pull
That wagons have to-day
He didn't know that wagon wheels
Electrified, are what
The strongest star that ever pulled
Is not.
And other wheels on land and sea,
Electrified, bring forth
The transportation ties which bind
The East, West, South and North.
Today
Electricity is the way
To progress; the force
That drives along the course
Of success and, by gum,
It is going some.
"Hitch your wagon to a star"
Today is quite beside the mark,
If you would get there, near or far,
Hitch your wagon to a spark!

RAIDS ON NEGROES TRAP SLUMMERS

Richly Dressed White Women Scream When Caught by Police Net.

SOB WHEN FREED, AND FLEE IN AUTOS

Well Known Business Men Said to Have Been Escorts on Trip to Harlem's Little Africa.

Slummers, who since Chinatown ceased to glitter and most of its denizens moved to the west bank of the Hudson have been compelled to look in other districts for their color, have not yet recovered from the shock administered early Saturday morning when Inspector Ryan caused two of the most notorious of the black and tan dives in Harlem's Little Africa to be raided.

In these raids Baron Wilkins, once proprietor of a notorious resort in the old Tenderloin and now proprietor of a place at 134th Street and Seventh Avenue, and John W. Connor, also a negro, with a gaudy place in 134th Street, and three of their employes were locked up. But it was not until the patrol wagon had departed with the prisoners and the last policeman had left that scores of white men and women who were caught in the places felt better.

Many of these women were richly dressed; others wore fortunes in jewelry, and apparently had gone to the Wilkins and Connors resorts after an evening at the theatre or at downtown cabarets where the fun, if fast, was not as furious as further north. These women screamed and would not be comforted when the police, under Lieutenant McAuliffe, broke into the place. When they received word that they could go they hurried out, and when more than twenty private automobiles laden with women made their way down Seventh Avenue most of the occupants were still sobbing with fright.

Of the men in the party many were in evening clothes, and some were declared to be persons well known in the financial and commercial districts. Of the women with them many were apparently of the better class, while others were of the small town type, in New York to see the sights and find something to be duly shocked at. These got the shocks all right, only ahead of time.

Until Chinatown began to dim, those so-called Bohemians who like color in their night life made that section their headquarters. But Chinatown has long been sedate, and somehow the tango joints on Broadway lacked the tang to hold the attention of the real sporty ones.

So the wise ones who like their dancing to smack of the Orient began going further north. To Wilkins's back room the night owls began to flock. Not a night but there was a string of big automobiles and taxicabs about the place at all hours.

To get into the place one entered what appeared to be the hall of an apartment house, and then through a dark passage reached a large room where there was music of a kind and many bad negroes of both sexes. There, too, many white women resorted, and the singing and dancing would, to say the least, not satisfy the Broadway standard of decorum.

Recently the respectable element among the 80,000 negroes who make up Harlem's Little Africa joined with their white neighbors in protesting to the police against such places as those of Wilkins and Connors. On these complaints Inspector Ryan had men working for some time gathering evidence, and on Friday afternoon Chief Magistrate McAdoo issued warrants.

The milkmen were on their routes Saturday morning when they were served, and the fun was at its heighth.

In Wilkins's place a mulatto girl was singing something about a "hula hula maid" when a white slummer, watching the door, screamed.

"The police!" she yelled.

Her cry was the signal for pandemonium. All the women in the place, and there were several score, began yelling at once. The men, black and white, swore. There was no chance to escape. The police, backing all hands into a corner, picked out Wilkins and several of his help and deposited them in the patrol wagon. Then the others were told to depart.

They did not wait for a repetition of the order. Within five minutes the crying women and scared men had worked their way through the jeering crowds outside to their cars and started for downtown.

At Connors's place a similar scene was witnessed.

Baron Wilkins insisted that there was no excitement in his place.

"Just a few arrests," he said. "Only a few folks were in here."

All those arrested will be in court Wednesday, when they are expected to waive examination and be held for trial.

SUPREME COURT OPENS NEW TERM

Begins Winter Session To-day with an Almost Clear Calendar.

IMPORTANT CASES AWAIT DECISIONS

Tariff Rebate and Income Tax Questions Involved in Coming Hearings.

[From The Tribune Bureau.]

Washington, Oct. 10.—How the wheels of justice, so far as the Supreme Court of the United States is concerned, have been "speeded up" in the last few years, is shown by the fact that when the new term begins tomorrow there will be only ten cases on which the justices have heard argument, but have not handed down decisions.

The present almost clear calendar has not been reached by any sudden spurt. The clearing has been going on for three years. Last session, however, the court surprised lawyers by disposing of 539 cases, leaving only 524, the lawest number in years. The number disposed of was greater than in any year except the previous two years and 1890. Many of the cases disposed of required the most laborious consideration. At the beginning of last term there were 535 cases pending and 528 more were filed, making 1,063 cases confronting the court.

Of the ten cases awaiting decision two are of particular importance. One, on which social workers of a score of states are waiting, is a test of the Oregon law fixing the minimum wage for women. The test embraces two of the ten cases, but decision probably will be handed down on both at the same time. The decision will not only determine the law for Oregon, but will virtually settle whether laws of this kind will stand or can be enacted in many other states. If it is against the minimum wage, the decision will mean a vigorous fight to amend the United States Constitution.

Another two cases have a vital bearing on the question of shipping liquor from a wet state into a dry one. Both involve a distillery in Cumberland, Md., which shipped liquor over the Potomac River into dry West Virginia.

One of the most important cases to be considered, from present indications, is that against the International Harvester Company, on which the court is believed to have stood four to four last term, with Justice McReynolds not voting because, as Attorney General, he had taken part in the prosecution. This case will, it is believed, lay down several important principles on the anti-trust laws, and, in the opinion of many attorneys, will determine the action on the Steel, Reading Railway and a half dozen other cases. As circuit courts of appeals have within the last year expressed opinions absolutely at conflict on the principle of law which must be determined in settling this case, more importance is attached to this case than to any other which the government will press this term.

The constitutionality of the income tax law will be determined if the court decides another case which has been set for an early hearing, while the fate of the migratory bird law also will come up.

The Treasury Department is vitally interested in the appeal from the Customs Court of Appeals, which has held that the 5 per cent rebate in tariff duties on goods brought to this country in American bottoms should be paid to the importers. This would force the payment by the Treasury to importers of approximately $15,000,000. The Treasury ignored this clause of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill, acting on the opinion of the then Attorney General, Mr. McReynolds, but the Customs Court of Appeals upheld the section.

One of the most interesting criminal cases to come up is that of Diggs and Caminetti under the Mann white slave act. In June the court ordered a review of these cases, which means that the young men will have another chance to escape prison for taking two girls across the California-Nevada line for alleged immoral purposes.

The government will press at the present term its suit against the Hamburg-American Line for alleged participation in the trans-Atlantic steamship pool.

With the cases that have been filed so far, there are 672 suits before the court, but this is not formidable considering the number disposed of last year. Eleven of the 672 are so-called original cases, or suits between states, which have never been tried in any of the lower courts. One of these is the sui tof Virginia against West Virginia, which has been decided, but which will stay on the court's docket until West Virginia pays the fourteen odd millions she was ordered to pay to Virginia.

Gasologue No. 4

"That's the point!"

"What point?"

"Ignition point."

"But I've always bought gasoline on a gravity basis."

"You're not the only one."

"But doesn't a low ignition point always go with high gravity?"

"You ought to know. Does it?"

"What do you mean?"

"You buy high gravity gas. Do you ever have trouble starting?"

"Well, sometimes, when my tank is nearly empty—

"Thought so. You see your high gravity gas isn't always what it's cracked up to be. Probably it's a mixture of a very light fuel with a heavy fuel. That wouldn't be so bad, if the mixture only stayed mixed. But it doesn't. The light stuff is used up first—car going like a dream. Then you get down near the bottom of your tank and your engine begins to have duck fits trying to chew up the heavy end of that mixture."

"Then ignition point is what I'm to ask for—"

"Ask for SOCONY Motor Gasoline. It's a straight-distilled product—not a mixture. The ignition point is right, the gravity is right, and every drop is like every other drop, whenever and wherever you buy it."

"But where can I buy SOCONY?"

"SOCONY Motor Gasoline is sold wherever there's a road big enough for your car to drive on. Just look for the red, white and blue SOCONY sign on the garage or supply station."
