TOPICS OF DAY IN WALL STREET

Good Buying of the Rails the Chief Feature of an Irregular Day.

BROKERS CALL THEIR ACTION "IMPRESSIVE"

Congress and Labor Disturbing Factors—Big Railroad Earnings in the Northwest.

Good buying of railroad stocks was the chief feature of yesterday's irregular market. Most of these issues closed either at the top or close to it. The chief deterrent to activity in the rails thus far has been foreign liquidation, but foreign liquidation has been headed in the bond market, and there are many influences at work to offset it in the stock market. The chief of these is the rise in sterling exchange, which is cutting down the premium on foreign sales of "Americans." Another influence that may have been at work yesterday is the report that the British government will gather up a quantity of our stocks and bonds held abroad and use them as the basis for a loan here. Then, the large earnings of the railroad companies may have made just such an appeal to the imaginations of their foreign stockholders as they have to American investors. At any rate, brokers were prone to call "impressive" the strength of such securities as Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, the Eries and the Northwestern group. Atchison was an exception to the general rule of the rails. It showed, at one time, an advance of ⅝, but this was lost, and more, too, in the late dealings.

Congress the New Factor.

Congress and all its works, which have so often been an important factor in the stock market, are again being taken into consideration by the financial community. There is no knowing definitely what will be done in the matter of foreign relations. The preparedness programme promises to be an bone of contention. As for general business, while there have been many intimations of a new benevolence with regard to it, promises have been few. Wherefore the coming session of the national legislature is regarded as a factor of the greatest uncertainty in stock market operations, and the disposition in many quarters is to go slow until it can be seen what the legislators purpose doing and how likely they are to get it done.

Introspection's Day.

In the current stock market Clark, Childs & Co. see plainest of all a disposition of operators "to get down once more to rock-bottom facts and to give less attention to tales which are plainly the work of a vivid imagination." They look forward to a decline of business and a period of introspection, of which they say the market is greatly in need. In their opinion this will mean a regrouping of securities with respect to the prospects of future movements of income and prices, and with particular reference to the meaning of European peace on the affairs of various corporations. "The safest section of the market," they say, "appears to be the low priced railroads, which have managed to show their fixed charges earned in recent years of business depression and government antagonism, and are now beginning to show heavy gains in revenue."

Seeks America's Money.

There is much significance in the amendment to the British finance bill which would exempt future bond issues of Great Britain in the hands of foreign holders from the operations of the income tax. Great Britain, financing her own needs and much of her allies', is bidding for the world's money. There is more available for her uses in the United States than anywhere else, or in all other countries combined. Evidently she intends to leave no stone unturned to get it. Thanks to the activity of Austrian and German agents in the United States, the mischief making among workmen, the destruction of munitions factories, the incendiary fires on ships leaving American ports, to say nothing of the submarine atrocities, there is a growing disposition in this country to think that the Allies' fight is not only theirs, but America's; or so it is believed in the financial district. Once the idea is spread broadcast in the United States that the Allies must and will win, there is likely to be considerable diversion of our surplus funds into British government securities.

Mobilizing "Americans."

That there will be some favorable effect on our securities markets if the British government carries through its plan to mobilize American securities—borrowing them from their owners and using them as collateral for supplementary credits here—is not to be doubted. Of course the government is not likely to get even a majority of the "Americans" still held in Great Britain, nor, in all probability, will it desire to. Nevertheless, the plan, if effected, will make a considerable diminution in the liquidation from abroad that otherwise would continue here until victory for the Allies was in sight.

What May Happen.

If the war is truly a war of attrition, it does not take much imagination to see that victory for the Allies may be due to our own Federal Reserve banking system, whether the system wills it or not. For practical purposes it does not make much difference which pocket a man takes his money out of. He has the same amount of money, whether it is in two pockets or one.

Big Railroad Earnings.

Earnings of the Northwestern railways are running far ahead of expectations. Not only is eastbound traffic abnormal, but there is a big volume of freight moving Westward. Officers of the St. Paul have been surprised by the rapidity with which the lumber trade has revived. Great Northern officers say their road is doing a record freight business. So the story goes all through the Northwest. It's an ill wind that blows nobody good, and the congestion at Atlantic seaboard points has brought a harvest to the Western lines, for freight is going to the Pacific Coast from points as far East as Pittsburgh that would otherwise be exported through Atlantic ports. Included in this traffic are considerable amounts of guns and ammunition destined for Russia.

Famine of Labor Near.

Labor troubles promise to demand more and more consideration as time goes on. Munition factories have been stealing men from one another, often at an advance of 25 per cent in wages. In a number of manufacturing establishments around New York, many of them places whose output is of staple goods, there is a regular famine of labor. In Newark, where there are works of the Coats Thread Company, the Westinghouse Electric, the Crucible Steel and other big manufacturing concerns, the local newspapers have been flooded with advertisements for labor, but the demand continues insistent. Employers tell of taking men off the streets and paying them good wages while they are learning. The high wages paid by the munitions makers have brought about a good deal of unrest in the labor world, and this winter promises to have more than the usual amount of disputes.

Miners Want More Money.

In January the coal miners will hold their convention, and frame an agreement to be proposed instead of that which expires on April 1. There is thought to be little likelihood of their not getting their demands in shape by that time, because there is a pretty definite idea among the men in the anthracite region that a 20 per cent increase in wages and a decrease from 9 to 8 hours a day ought to be sought. Miners of bituminous coal, too, are expected to ask for betterments in their wage scale. So far, however, there is no indication that the mine owners are prepared to make any concessions.
