MAYOR TESTIFIES TO AID ROFRANO

Called by Prosecution, He Bears Out Important Link in Defence

Mayor Mitchel, called by the prosecution, proved a good witness for Michael A. Rofrano yesterday at the trial of the ex-Deputy Street Cleaning Commissioner, charged with murder. His testimony bore out an important link in the defence that Rofrano was not in his office in the Municipal Building on February 18, 1915, when telephone records show there was a connection between his office and Rox Cornell's flat in Borough Park, Brooklyn.

Rofrano had testified that he was in his law office at 198 Broadway dictating confidential memoranda at the request of the Mayor. Up to yesterday the Mayor had been unable to refresh his recollection as to the matter. Much to the surprise of Assistant District Attorney Brothers, he announced on the stand that office records had refreshed his memory.

Incidentally, Martin W. Littleton, Rofrano's counsel, used the Mayor on cross examination as a character witness for the defendant.

Found Reputation Good

"I investigated him before indorsing his appointment to the department and I found his reputation good," the Mayor said.

James Knox, a chauffeur, testified that sometime between January and March, 1915, he drove Rofrano in one of Deputy Commissioner Mauro's cars to the vicinity of Fourteenth Avenue and Fifty-sixth Street, Brooklyn. Rofrano, he said, went into a house there. Joseph Brondini, one of the alleged accomplices to the murder now awaiting trial, lives on this corner. Rofrano has testified that he never knew Brondini and had never been near his home.

Mr. Littleton, summing up the defence last night, scored the tactics of the District Attorney's office in prosecuting the charge against Rofrano. He branded the principal witnesses employed by his opponents as thieves, convicts and murderers, actuated solely by a desire to escape life imprisonment and the electric chair to put Rofrano into the murder plot because they knew the agents of ex-Sheriff Tom Foley wanted it done.

Convicts such as these men are beyond belief, Mr. Littleton asserted, adding that some convicts had told the truth. He cited the case of "O. Henry" as an example. Mr. Littleton paid tribute to the genius of the writer, calling it second only to that of Edgar Allan Poe.

"Foolishly Ran Away"

"O. Henry foolishly ran away to South America and when he did return a long time afterward he was tried and convicted of embezzlement, chiefly, I believe, because he ran away in face of the charges against him." Rofrano was a fugitive from justice for eight months after his indictment.

"I can forgive much of the prejudice and persecution shown by the District Attorney's office against Rofrano," the lawyer continued, "but I cannot forgive the action of Assistant District Attorney Dooling in subpoenaing all our witnesses before him as fast as their names were mentioned in the opening of our case. Why it was necessary to do that I don't know!"

PATCHED AT SEA, ESPAGNE SAFE IN

Cement Seals Hole Made in Side—Passenger Says French Rule Air

When the French liner Espagne steamed up the bay yesterday, a crudely patched hole was plainly visible on her starboard side. This was the result of a collision with an unidentified tramp steamer in the Bay of Biscay, on October 31.

Two days off the French coast, at 11 p. m., the lookout in the forward crow's nest sighted a vessel dead ahead, with apparently no lights burning. Captain Laurent shouted to put the wheel hard a-starboard, which would have averted a crash had not the tramp turned in the same direction. The next high wave caused the steamer to smash against the Espagne just abaft the anchor chains. An ugly hole was the result, and the sea began pouring in.

Many passengers were thrown from their berths and immediately ran on deck, believing that the Espagne had been torpedoed. Lifebelts were distributed, and the lifeboats were swung from their cradles.

Meanwhile the tramp stood by and inquired by wireless if the "spagne needed assistance. After making an examination Captain Laurent replied that the Espagne was not in danger. As a precautionary measure he flashed an S. O. S. call. In response to the distress signals three British cruisers, the Spanish liner Regina Maria Christina, and the Missouri, of the Hawaiian-American Line, came up under full steam, and stood by.

Yesterday Captain Laurent was not a little proud of the way in which his crew had mended the hole. Planks were lowered along the outside of the ship's bow, and while these were held in place by the pressure of the water, large steel plates were riveted inside, to cover the opening. Cement was then poured between the boards and plates, and in a few hours a solid filling had stopped the aperture.

Max Linder, the Charlie Chaplin of France, was another passenger. He has come to this country to act before the screen. At the outbreak of the war Mr. Linder joined his regiment, but was wounded in his right arm, and after recovery he was released from further military service.

MOTHER FINDS VICTIM OF AUTO IS HER SON

Comes from Apartment to See His Body—Chauffeur Flees

A boy was hit by an automobile last night on Amsterdam Avenue, near 168th Street. He was picked up and carried into the entrance of 2183 Amsterdam Avenue. Mrs. George H. Staite, coming down from her apartment on an upper floor, saw the group in the hallway and approached to see what was the matter.

It was her son Irving, eight years old, whose body was stretched on the floor. He had been flung ten feet and killed. A chauffeur, the only occupant of the touring car that struck him, put on speed and escaped.

House Washington Used Burned

Fire destroyed a historic dwelling house at Chapman and Rose streets, Queens Borough, yesterday. George Washington, it is said, made his headquarters in the old dwelling during the Battle of Long Island. Many revolutionary relics were lost.

JESTER TO "KING" OF GANG SLAIN

Wag of Harlem's Little Italy Pays for Friendship with Life

George Espisito, a pedler, known in Harlem's Little Italy as "the big fat slob" and the man who made lighter with jest and song the life of "King" Giosue Gallucci before that monarch was deposed two years ago by the discharge of a shotgun held by his enemies, paid with his life yesterday for his friendship with the "King." Across the street from the stable at 338 East 108th Street, in and near which ten men have died in the vendettas of Little Italy's gangsters, Espisito was shot throgh the heart by a man who leaped from a tenement doorway. The assassin escaped.

Espisito's place among the warring factions of Little Italy was unique. He was not a combatant; to the knowledge of the police he had never been engaged in any of the stiletto or gun scrapes. He was a fat, jolly man, with gifts of song and story-telling. He was of the inner circle of "King" Gallucci's friends, but he was not in it. He was a sort of unofficial court jester to the "King."

"George was nothing but a big, fat slob," said a man who has lived in Little Italy for many years. "He could tell a funny story and he could sing a song, and he was always jolly and in a good humor. Gallucci used to like to have him around because George was one of the few men who could make him laugh. Nobody ever heard of George being mixed up in any of their work; nobody ever believed that Gallucci trusted him with any confidences or told him just what was being done to exact tribute from Little Italy."

"Then why was he killed?"

"Somebody thought he knew something," said Captain Jones, of the Third Branch Detective Bureau, "and was afraid he would tell it."

Espisito lived with his wife, Rosa, and their five children in a flat in the dingy tenement at 401 East 116th Street. He had lived for ten or fifteen years between Third Avenue and the river and 109th and 106th Streets. Yesterday morning he left his house at 6:30 o'clock and started to walk to the "murder stable," where he kept his horse and wagon, from which he sold vegetables.

At First Avenue and 107th Street he met Patrolmen Briggs and Behan and spoke to them. At the next corner he turned into 108th Street, on the opposite side from the Grecco stable. In front of 335 East 108th Street a man stepped from a tenement hallway and fired three shots. One of them pierced Espisito's heart. He fell forward and the assassin ran around the corner into First Avenue.

Briggs and Behan heard the shots. When they reached the scene Espisito was dying. He had just strength enough left to gasp that a man had leaped from a hallway and shot him. He said he did not know his assailant. More than a score of men had crowded around Espisito when the policemen reached him, but none of them would admit having seen the shooting.

Gas Kills Man and Wife

Otto Weitzfeldt and his wife, Betty, were found dead in their apartment, at 32 Avenue A, yesterday. They had been asphyxiated by gas.
