No Willard-Dempsey Fight at Cumberland

Rickard Gets A Hard Blow From South

Gov. Harrington of Maryland Puts Veto on 'Fight' for Title at Cumberland

By Fred Hawthorne

Jess Willard and Jack Dempsey will not fight for the heavyweight championship of the world at Cumberland, Maryland, or in any other part of the state, on July 4, unless Tex Rickard, the promoter, who has been dickering with the authorities down there, can convince Governor Harrington that Jess and Jack are not going to engage in a "prizefight."

This became known last night, when the Southern Governor announced his decision in the matter. When Rickard, at the Hotel Biltmore, was told of Governor Harrington's statement, he declared he did not know the subtle difference between a boxing bout and a prize fight, and would not attempt to draw the hair-line distinction that the Southern executive craved, ere he would allow the big fellows to maul each other.

It was evident, however, that Tex was keenly disappointed at the sudden turn of events, and that he had probably about made up his mind, previous to the bad news, to hold the big fight in Cumberland. The premier promoter attempted at once to establish telephonic communication with John Snyder, the Cumberland hotel man, who has been hounding Rickard's footsteps and camping on his doormat for the last three weeks, in the effort to gain Tex's consent to hold the bout in Maryland.

Up to a late hour last night, however, Snyder could not be found in Cumberland, but Rickard expects him to show up at the Biltmore some time to-day, the engagement having been previously made, when the situation will be thoroughly discussed.

"I was not the seeker of Cumberland as a place for holding the Willard-Dempsey bout; the town sought me, and I made no definite statement as to whether I would accept the offer or not," declared Tex last night.

"I simply told Mr. Snyder and his associates that, if I was assured the fight could be pulled off in Cumberland, and the other details were satisfactory, I would put Willard and Dempsey in the ring there. I have other places in view, however, and I shall make a definite announcement within the next few days.

"I understand Governor Harrington wants to be assured the fight is not going to be a prizefight, but a boxing bout. I can assure you that I don't see the difference myself, and certainly I would not attempt to convince the Governor under the circumstances."

Rickard refused to make any positive statement as to the other places he has in mind as a site for the championship bout, but seemed confident of his ability to find a haven for the event before May 4, at which time, according to the articles of agreement, he must make known his choice.

Referring to the offer made on Monday night by Dave Mackay, manager of the Newark Sportsmen's Club, for a purse of $300,000 for an eight-round bout between Willard and Dempsey, Tex insisted once more than he would not sell the event to any man, no matter if the offer was a million dollar purse, but that he might consider New Jersey if everything else was satisfactory.

"I'm going to run this fight, and nobody else is going to have a hand in it," said Rickard with a snap of the jaw and a glint of the eye that indicated he meant every word he was saying.

Leonard Now an Alexander, With No Rivals Visible

By W. O. McGeehan

By his decisive victory over Ritchie at the 1st Regiment Armory at Newark Monday night Benny Leonard, the lightweight champion, has made himself a sort of young Alexander of the ring with no more "logical contenders" to conquer. Before the bout with Ritchie he clearly had demonstrated his superiority over all of the lightweights. Ritchie was not a lightweight, but he was the nearest thing to one and gave the lightweight champion a better battle than any of the lignthweights could put up.

The next "logical match" for Leonard would be a bout with Jack Britton, the welterweight champion. In such a bout the lightweight title holder would have to give away about seven pounds, but it would be a fair risk, with the prospect of emulating Robert Fitzsimmons and holding two titles.

Right now the crop of lightweights is deplorably short. There are only two or three that would draw a corporal's guard in a bout with Leonard. Dundee and Welling perhaps are the best two in sight. Neither one would be conceded to have had even the chance that Ritchie was supposed to have had before Monday night. Consequently, it seems up to Leonard to step up out of his class.

Ritchie's showing Monday night was remarkable for a boxer who practically had been out of the ring game for five years. He did not seem to have the stamina that was his when he won the championship from Wolgast, but he certainly displayed a bulldog courage. It was this courage that made the bout a fight that will be remembered as one of the fastest and most interesting that has been seen in this vicinity for some time.

Ritchie fought as he always has fought, crowding in and taking the best that the cleverer man could give him. His recovery after the knockdown in the second round was remarkable in view of the fact that he had been out of the ring so long. It would have disconcerted any fighter other than a cool and courageous one of the Leonard type. In the fourth round Ritchie seemed to have recovered entirely and to have stamina enough left to bring over the one punch that might have won for him.

The Californian was beaten as Nelson was beaten when he lost the championship to Wolgast, standing on his feet. It was a merciful thing for Referee Brennan to have ended it this way. Nobody wanted to see the final punch put over. Ritchie has given the big crowd as clean an exhibition of pure gameness as has been seen in the ring.

The fact that the fight, which did not involve any championship, drew something like $58,000 is an indication of the increased interest in boxing. The largest house drawn by a lightweight championship fight was the gate at the Gans-Nelson fight at Goldfield, which was $69,715. The next best purse for a lightweight fight was that of the Britt-Nelson fight in San Francisco. That drew $48,311.

Moses Wins Squash Fray After Tussle

Players in Final Round Match at Crescent A. C. Show Lots of Stamina

A record match for endurance was won by A. S. Moses in vanquishing Harold Somers in the final round match of the Class B. squash tennis championship tournament at the Crescent Athletic Club yesterday. The play lasted two and one-half hours, and up to the final point the victor was in doubt. Moses scored the winning point with a lightning smash. The score was 8—15, 18—17, 9—15, 17—14, 18—17.

Both men depenced principally on hard smashing to score aces, and in this respect Moses was the more fortunate in keeping his shots within the boundaries of the court. Somers used a change of pace to good effect in the first game, early gaining a big lead which Somers never could make up. In the second game Moses's fast shots enabled him to set matters at 13—all, and an error gave him his winning point.

Somers came back determinedly in the third game, hitting low and returning to the back wall corners for consistent points. Moses rallied towards the end, but never seriously threatened to catch his opponent. The fourth and fifth games also proved set tussles. In the fourth, Moses jumped into the lead early, but Somers succeeded in collecting three points and setting the match at 3—all. However, he never collected another point, as Moses scored his three necessary aces in the extra set in two hands.

In the fifth game both men played hard, and so close was the fighting that not more than one point separated the players at any time.

In a third round match of the Class C. championship, G. P. Kennedy won after three games from M. F. Tompkins by a score of 8—15, 15—11, 15—3.

Yale Second Crew To Enter Henley Regatta on May 31

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 29.—Yale's second university crew has been entered in the Henley regatta on the Schuylkill River May 31, according to crew announcements to-day.

The Princeton crews, which will row Yale on the Housatonic River at Derby Saturday, will arrive here on Thursday. This will afford them two days for practice on the course.

Final arrangements for the regatta have been made and in addition to the observation train, which will leave the Shelton station at 3 p. m., half an hour before the time set for the first event, the railroad company will probably run a special train from this city to Shelton for persons who prefer this means of going there to automobile or trolley.

The referee and starter will be W. A. Meikelham, who long has officiated at the Thames River races. The timers will be L. Donnelly, Princeton, and H. Swayne, Yale, and the finish judges F. H. Gates, of Derby, D. T. Vaill, for Yale, and H. S. Chisholm, for Princeton.
