Mrs. Uthe Wedded To Son-in-Law on "Daughters' Plea

Bride Attends Club Meeting and Gives Additional Reasons for Her Unusual Matrimonial Contract

Mrs. Sarah Wright McDannold Uthe, bridal figure in white serge and pearls, was the center of interest at the meeting of the Woman's Press Club yesterday afternoon at the Waldorf-Astoria. No mention was made from the platform of her recent marriage to her son-in-law, George R. Uthe, of Brentwood, N. J.

"It was the simple, sensible thing to do," she explained, "and it was my daughter's request before she died. She said to George, 'Get her to marry you if you can!' You see, we had lived under the same roof for twenty years and neither of us wanted to break up the home, but I didn't think it was fair to ask anyone to stay there unless we were married. I wouldn't live in a flat alone with any man unless I were married to him, not even a man young enough to be my son-in-law. I don't see anything strange about that.

"He has nobody in the world but me, and so it was the most natural thing for us to want to stay together. He has made the same financial arrangements for me that he did for my daughter."

Mrs. Uthe said that she had had letters and press clippings from many cities commenting on her slaughter of the mother-in-law joke. One letter, however, was from the only surviving attendant at her first wedding when she was married to Mr. McDannold fifty years ago. All her bridesmaids and the bridegroom's men, save the one, are dead, and she had not heard from this man for many years.

Her name appeared on the program as Mrs. Sarah Wright McDannold, and she said that she would retain her own name for literary purposes. The members of the Lucy Stone League, she said, however, that she would not join that organization, as she belonged to enough clubs already. A row of badges and jewelled emblems which adorned her bosom testified to this.

Intelligence Test Held Successful at Harvard

Business School to Utilize System to Weed Out Unpromising Students

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Jan. 28.—Experiments with general intelligence tests conducted by the Harvard business school during the last year have been so successful that the school may use such tests hereafter as a supplement to existing entrance requirements, according to the annual report of Dean Wallace B. Donham, made public to-night. Entering classes at the school must be restricted to 450 men, the report says, owing to "hopelessly inadequate" physical equipment.

Tests already given by Assistant Professor Daniel Starch, formerly of the University of Wisconsin, followed lines devised by the Carnegie Institute, according to Dean Donham. Although the experiment was undertaken with a "considerable degree of skepticism," results, the report declares, "surpassed our hopes."

"Marked correlation was indicated," the dean continues, "between the intelligence rating of the men, as determined by these tests and the scholastic grades given in different courses. The indications are that these tests place us in possession of a method by which we may sort out in advance the men who are not competent to benefit by the course of study to which they are here subjected."

Guy Maier Illustrates Songs for Young Folks

Orchestral Concert Diversified by Artist's Explanation of His Work at Piano

At the New York Symphony Orchestra's Young People's concert yesterday at Carnegie Hall Mr. Coates put plenty of vim into the music assigned to the orchestra, but yielded the speaking part in the afternoon's exercises to Guy Maier. If instruction or entertainment, or, in the approved modern manner, instruction by way of entertainment, is the aim of this series, the younger youth present should have absorbed ideas of total beauty and musical expressiveness both from the excellent playing of the orchestra and from Mr. Maier's contribution.

It is a difficult task to talk about music. Oh yes, to enhance interest in it. Mr. Maier entered upon it with engaging informality. Prefacing each with just enough of explanation and manifest suggestion to whet the attention of his hearers, he played upon the piano a number of short pieces, including Schubert's "Erlkönig." He was many times recalled.

Furthermore, his appearance, without his musical twin cleared up a mystery hitherto baffling. Now we know which is Mr. Maier and which is Mr. Pattison.

Mrs. William G. Warden, of Philadelphia, entertained at tea at her cottage in Everglades Avenue.

Titta Ruffo in "Ernani"

Baritone in Good Voice; "Die Tote Stadt" Sung in Evening

Interest in the repetition of "Ernani" at the Metropolitan Opera House yesterday afternoon was heightened by the appearance of Titta Ruffo in the role of Don Carlos. He was to have sung this role at the first performance of the opera, but illness prevented his appearance. Yesterday Mr. Ruffo was vocally in the vein and his singing was notable for greater refinement than usual. A large audience was hearty in applause. The other members of the cast included Miss Ponselle, Mr. Martinelli and Mr. Mardones.

In the evening "Die Tote Stadt" was repeated at popular prices with the usual cast, including Mme. Jeritza, Miss Telva, Mr. Harrold and Mr. Leonhardt.

$1,950 Given for Chippendale Chair Of Savery's Make

Sale at Anderson Galleries, Which Had Been Going On for a Week, Ends With Total of $117,132

The Jacob Paxson Temple collection of fine early American furniture brought a total of $117,132.60 at the week's sale, which came to a close yesterday at the Anderson Galleries. The rarest of all the important specimens of Colonial cabinetmaking in the collection, the mahogany highboy in the Chippendale style by William Savery, of Philadelphia, brought $4,950, the highest price of the sale.

This beautiful object, dating from 1760, is eight feet in height. It has seven tiers of drawers, surmounted by an unusual broken arch carving with rocaille cartouche in the middle. It went to Dr. A. S. W. Rosenbach.

The final session's total was $38,042.

Though yesterday's sale was notable for its furniture offerings, important specimens of Lowestoft porcelain, historical china, Tucker china and antique glassware were also offered. A set of two mahogany arm chairs and six side chairs, made in America in the Chippendale style of about 1760, and having a rare type of pretzel back and straight seats covered with needlework, was sold to H. Lehman for $2,850.

Another rare lot was the set of six Queen Anne style mahogany side chairs of early eighteenth century American workmanship which was acquired by Mrs. J. Otis with a bid of $1,325.

The sale attracted a large audience, despite the weather, and the bidding was closely contested.

Other sales were:

Mahogany lowboy by William Savery, Philadelphia, 1760, to Mrs. H. L. Huntington, $1,950; English eighteenth century mahogany four-poster bedstead, to Miss K. McCormick, $1,200; very rare painted pinewood chest of drawers, New England, 1850, to Miss H. Counihan, agent, $1,150; important Adam style mantelpiece, American, 1785, to C. O. Cornelius, $650; early Jacobean highboy, American, 1725, to Miss Counihan, agent, $800; mahogany side board, American, 1795, to H. Lehman, $800; mahogany grandfather's clock by William Boston, 1800, to Mrs. C. Otis, $750; mahogany grandfather's clock by Sherman, 1790, to Miss Counihan, agent, $700; mahogany sofa American, 1790, to Miss Counihan, agent, $650; China service used on the frigate Constitution, 1820, to Miss K. McCormick, $650; mahogany block-front desk, American, 1760, to Miss Counihan, agent, $600; mahogany pleciant table, American, 1760, to H. Lehman, $600.
