Army Witness Aids Blizzard In Mine Case

Capt. John J. Wilson Testifies That Union Leader Made Men Lay Down Arms to U. S. Officers

"Saved Us Ticklish Job"

Workers Seemed to Welcome Arrival of Troops; Led to Fear Logan Raiders

CHARLESTOWN, W. Va., May 8 (By The Associated Press).—A description of what the first Federal troops found when they entered the southern West Virginia coal fields last September to disperse the fighting miners and the combined forces that opposed them on the Logan County border, was given in Circuit Court to-day. Captain John J. Wilson, commander of the first troops to enter the trouble area, testified for the state in the trial of its charge that William Blizzard was guilty of treason. Testimony of ten other witnesses was mainly in corroboration of details of the march and fighting formerly told.

Captain Wilson said he made it his duty to learn what was in the minds of the miners, who, he declared, did not really know what they were fighting for. He described the fighting as a "comic opera war," but in relating the activities of the company he commanded said he found Blizzard highest in authority of the men he met among the miners. Among other witnesses were Adjutant General John H. Chatcock, of West Virginia, and a number of residents of towns close behind the irregular fifteen-mile line along which the forces met.

Captain Wilson said he reached Madison with 175 men September 2, and after throwing outguards had conferences with county officials and with Blizzard and other representatives of the miners' union.

He told the latter he was too busy to waste time with anybody unless he were assured it was the "right party." He got such assurance, and Blizzard declared if the captain and a squad of men would accompany him he would "bring the men down from the line" without bloodshed.

He heard Blizzard give no orders, he said, but he saw the result of them when he received the guns turned in by the miners while Blizzard stood on a hill directing the men. The officer said that the men went up in the hills for breakfast for an hour or two, came back for confabs or miner oratorards, went up again and wasted thousands of rounds of ammunition while killing nobody.

Under cross-examination the captain said Blizzard showed no antagonism toward the Federal troops and that he thought if it would have been a signal sufficient to disarm the battling miners Captain Wilson said it was the general impression they were "glad the time was up and that the Federal troops were coming in."

11 Farmers With 20 Tractors Off to Till Russian Soil

To Teach Reds Use of American-Made Implements and Then, if Venture Is Success, Return for More

Twenty American made tractors for use in Russia will be in the hold of the steamship Latvia when she sails from here to-morrow. Eleven husky farmers, sent by the American Federated Commission for the Relief of Famine Stricken Areas in Russia, also will be aboard.

Harold Ware is to be in charge of the expedition. He says it is not a commercial deal, but a demonstration of American methods and an entirely new form of relief in Russia.

"We are going to help the Russians by teaching them to help themselves," said he. "Several large farm implement manufacturing companies are backing us. The Russians need food and the American factory owners need trade. We hope this will be only the forerunner of an extensive business between Russians and American farm implement makers."

The unit will go by way of Hamburg, Danzig and Libau, through Moscow, and down into the heart of the famine stricken area. It will locate along the Saratov. Work will be started immediately, the Americans replacing themselves with natives as soon as possible after teaching the mAmerican methods. Within eight months the group expects to be aboard ship, taking over a second load three times as large as the first.

The unit will be entirely self-supporting. The supplies will include wheat drills, tank wagons, twenty large type tractors, one small tractor, twenty plows, a completely equipped machine shop, three automobiles, engine oils, 6,200 feet of educational film, a motion picture camera, stove dishes, typhus proof tents and 80,000 cigarettes.

Enough seed will be taken to cultivate 15,000 acres, the size of the first colony. Two varieties of grain will be used—Turkish Red wheat and Kansas Rosen rye. They are native to Russia, but were brought to America many years ago and their stock improved.

Mr. Ware formerly was connected with the faculty of Pennsylvania State Agricultural College. For two years he directed the children's gardens at Moosecheart, Ill., and during that time made them famous in agricultural circles.
