A

GOOD FIGHT.

BY CHARLES READE.

On these grand occasions no one was treated whole, and reserved for the peers. But the wise as well as charitable prince had discovered that whatever venison, hares, birds, pouitry, etc., you skewered into that beef cavern got cooked to perfection, retaining their own juices, and receiving those of the roasting ex. There he could has tee-totalling and look to the light there, and roll over the fire at his word, while the people went feasting and drove silver tridents into the steaming cave at random, and roasted a hare, a turkey, and a flock of wild fowl. These presently smoked before Gerard and company, and Peter's face positively lost one slight menace at the sight of the unique dish expanded and lit up. After trying twenty different tarts of fruit, sauced twice as fast at all the confectionery on a table made entirely of sugar, a knight and painted in the interstices of the tastiest, a chase with their noses and dishes, inclined to the life, explicits, camels, fonts, heights on horseback, stags, kings and princesses looking on; transparent lovings, and all these characters delicious eating, and their veins filled with sweets enough to make all at needle to be destroyed. The guests feasted a long, long, crowded with rumour and lickerish and sweet, crackled a step, cops, absentee, crotier and all extremely so we on a runaway comet; sipping, meanwhile, Hippocras and other spiced drinks and drank and Cyprian wines, while every now and then lovely, jewelled, and gilt, came offering on fennel fine trouble of rose water and orange water to keep the poetic hands cool and perfumed.

But long before any party arrived at the final stage, appetite had succumbed, and even two dreams more had occurred apparently trifling. Gerard had suddenly remembered he was the bearer of a letter to the Princess Marie, and, in an under tone, had asked one of the servants if he would undertake to deliver it. The man took it with a deep obeisance. He could not deliver it himself, but would instantly give it to one of the princesses, all several of whom were about.

It may be remembered that Peter and Margaret came here not to dine, but to find their cousin. Well, the old gentleman ate heartily, and being much fatigued dropt asleep, and forget all about his cousin. Margaret did not remind him, so shall hear why.

Meantime, their cousin William Johnson, alderman of Rotterdam, was seated within a few feet of them, at their backs, and discovered them, when Margaret turned round and screamed at the team. But he did not speak to them, for the following reason. Margaret was very plainly dressed, and Peter inclined to threadbare. So the alderman said:

"Well, it time to make up to them when the sun sets and the company dispersed, then I will take my poor relations to my house, and some will be the wiser."

Half the courses were lost on Gerard and Margaret. They were no great eaters, and just now were feeding on sweet thoughts that have ever been unfavorable to appetite. And it was a relief to them when the dessert came and the valets retired a few steps, and they could talk without being overheard. But there is a delicate kind of sensality, to whose influence these two were perhaps more sensitive than any other pair in that assembly, the delights of color, music, and perfume, all of which blended so fascinatingly here.

Margaret leaned back and half closed her eyes, and murmured to Gerard: "What a lovely scene! the warm sun, the green shade, the rich dresses, the bright music of the lutes and the cool music of the fountain, and all faces so happy and gay! and it is to you we owe it."

Gerard was silent.

"Now, don't speak to me," said Margaret languidly, "lest me listen to the fountain—what, are you a conjuror for?"

He told her.

"Very well! You will pay the piper at least."

"Which? which I have you mean out of my work?"

"I? no. But you will pay a price.

"I hope so! but what makes you think so?"

"Because you were so good to my father."

Gerard smiled at the fond one logic, and sang he load at the sweet pride and was silent.

"Don't speak," murmured Margaret. "They say this is a world of sin and misery. Can that be? What is your opinion?"

"No! that is all a silly old saw," explained Gerard.

"I'm a by-word our elders keep repeating out of custom—it is not true."

"How can you know? you are but a child," said Margaret, with pensive dignity.

"Why only look round! And then I thought I had lost you—forever; and you are by my side; and now the minstrels are going to play again. She and misery? Stuff and nonsense!"

"What do you admire most of all these beautiful things, Gerard?"

"You know my nature? Know it then!"

"Write magic! I am a witch."

"Angels are fever witches. But I don't think how you—"

"Foolish boy! was it not cried at the gate loud enough to deafen one?"

"So it was. Where is my head? What do I admire most? If you will eat a little more that way, I'll tell you."

"This way?"

"Yes! so that the light may fall on you. There. I see many beautiful things here, more beautiful than I could have conceived; but the finest of all, to my eye, is your lovely hair in its silver frame, and the setting sun kissing it. It minds me of what the Vulgate praised for beauty, 'an apple of gold in a network of silver,' and, Oh what a pity I did not know you before I went in my poor efforts at illuminating! I could illuminate so much better now. I could do everything better. There, now the sun is full on it, it is like an aureole. So our Lady looked, and none since her until today."

"Oh fie! it is wicked to talk so. Compare a poor coarse-favored girl like me, with the Queen of Heaven! Oh, Gerard! I thought you were a good young man."

"So I am. But I can't help having eyes—and a heart—Margaret."

"Gerard!"

"Don't be angry!"

"Now, is it likely?"

"I love you."

"Oh! for shame! you must not say that to me."

"I can't help it. I love you. I do love you."

"Hush, hush! for pity's sake! I must not listen to such words from a stranger. I am ungrateful to call you a stranger. Oh, how one may be mistaken! If I had known you were so bold—"

And Margaret's bosom began to heave, and her cheeks were covered with blushes, and she looked toward her sleeping father, very much like a timid thing that meditates an actual flight.

Then Gerard was frightened at the alarm he caused.

"Forgive me," said he, imploringly. "How could any one help loving you?"

"Well, sir, I will try and forgive you—you are so good in other respects; but then you must promise never to say you—to say that again."

"Give me your hand then, or you can't forgive me."

She hesitated; but eventually put out her hand a very little way, very slowly. He took it, and held it prisoner. When she thought it had been there long enough, she tried gently to draw it away. He held it tight, it submitted quite patiently to force. What is the use of resisting force? She turned her head away, and her long eyelashes drooped sweetly. Gerard took nothing by his promise. Words were not needed here, and silence was more eloquent. Nature was in that day what she is in ours; but manners were somewhat freer. Then, as now, virgins drew back alarmed at the first words of love, but of prudery and artificial coquetry there was little, and young soon read one another's hearts.

Everything was in Gerard's favor; his good looks, his belief in his goodness, her gratitude and, at the Duke's banquet this mellow summer eve, all things disposed the female nature to tenderness; the avenues to the heart lay open the senses were so soothed and subdued with lovely colors, gentle sounds, and delicate odors the sun gently sinking, the warm air, the green canopy, the cool music of the now violent fountain.

Gerard and Margaret sat hand in hand in silence; and Gerard's eyes sought here lovingly and hers now and then turned on him timidly and imploringly, and two sweet unreasonable tears rolled down her cheeks, and she smiled deliciously as they were dry.

And the sun declined, and the air cooled, and the fountain plashed more gently, and the pai throbbed in unison and silence, and this weary world was heaven to them.

CHAPTER IV.

A grave white-haired seneschal came to their table, and inquired courteously whether Gerard Desmoulins was of their company. Upon Gerard's answer, he said,

"The Princess Maria would confer with you, young sir; I am to conduct you to her presence."

Instantly all faces within hearing turned sharply round, and were bent with curiosity and envy on the man that was to go in to a princess.

Gerard rose to obey.

"I wager we shall not see you again," said Margaret, calmly, yet coloring a little.

"That will you," was the reply; then he whispered in her ear. "This is my good friend; but you are my cousin." He added a curt "Wait for me. I pray you. I will presently return."

"Ay, ay!" said Peter, who had just awoke.

Gerard gone, the pair whose cross was so homely, yet they were with the man whom the princess sent for, became "the exposure of neighboring eyes," observing which, William Johnson came forward, acted surprise, and claimed his relations.

"And to think that there was I at your backs, and you saw me not."

"Pardon me, cousin Johnson. I saw you long since," said Margaret coolly.

"Then why, cousin, did you not speak to me?"

"Nay, cousin, it was for you to welcome us to Rotterdam, and to ask us welcome to our Sovereigness. Your servant, cousin, can rest in your house."

"The idiot!"

"And I had a mind to see whether it was the blind like master," for these were her very words.

MEDICINES.

THE SCIENTIFIC SUCCESSOR OF THE WITCHES.

The Celebrated Medicine Advertised Under the Name of Sanderson's Fluid.

A BENEFACTRESS.

When a woman in the public eye, whose name has already been associated, in our mind, with the "Witches' Wands," and "Blunkey" but it is so no longer, and we desire to record her name from all such suspicious associations in all other minds. Whatever motives we may have of womanly delicacy and propriety, we will not admit that woman alone is the Nurse—the good Nurse—the sure Nurse. Whatever we shall have female physicians or not is a question which must be decided by time and principle, and not as a matter of taste. Pride, prejudice, caprice and custom may at most behave themselves, for if there is really a want there will also be a supply—if there be a calling, there will be a "calling." Nature and Woman Society are always self supplying, and though Art and Fashion may hinder, they cannot prevent.

Mrs. Winslow does not want to treat you, gentlemen! nor does she prescribe a regimen for your wives, but modestly appears as a messenger of health and happiness to your infants in the cradle. Is there anything improper in that? A mass of ten years' experience has boldly say what is or is not good for a babe—and ought to be believed so. God speed her on her humble but happy mission. She is the most universal benefactress our little one ever enjoyed—her doting parents not excepted. Just open the door for her, and Mrs Winslow will prove the American Florence Nightingale of the nursery. Of this we are so sure, that we will teach our "Boy" to say, "A Mamma on line, Wimslow," for helping her to survive and escape the griping, exhausting and seething pain. We confirm every word set forth in the Prospectus. It performs precisely what it professes to perform—every part of it, nothing less. Away with your "Cordials," "Paregoric," "Drops," "Sandoram," and every other narcotic, by which the babe is drugged into insensibility and rendered dull and lifeless for life!

We have never seen Mrs. Winslow—never her only through the preparation of her SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING. If we had the power we would make her to visit a child—wherever in the wide world.

BEWARE! BEWARE! TO MOTHERS.—MRS WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP is the only thing that young ones can safely open to give rest to themselves, and relief and health to your infants.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has been the means of restoring the happiest health to many mothers.

Over 50 thousand of the very best families use MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

To every mother who has children suffering from any of the complaints incident to the period of teething, we say do not let your own prejudices or those of others, stand in the way of the relief that will be sure—yes, absolutely sure—to follow the use of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP.

Druggists everywhere now buy MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP for children teething. No medicine in the United States sells like it. It is a standard medicine, and its fame world-wide. Physicians order and use it wherever its magical effects have been witnessed.

During the thirty years of unprecedented and increasing popularity of MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP has numerable "COMPOUNDS" and other nostrums, prepared by pretended M.D.'s have sprung up and died but a mushroom existence, while the SOOTHING SYRUP has been constantly increasing in popularity, and become a household word and thousands of mothers thank Mrs. Winslow for the health of their children by the use of her invaluable article.

When the present race of "Cordials" have followed in the footsteps of their "Illustrious predecessors," MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP will continue to be a popular favorite and a blessing to every mother.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TO THE SICK.—The great success of the new German Practice in curing all those affections which cause so much trouble to Physicians, and some sufferings to Patients, is now successfully practiced by Dr. HEINE. Diseases before considered incurable yield to this treatment with comparative ease:—Scrofulous Affections, Eruptions, Ulcers, Rheumatism, Hereditary Affections, Ulceration of the other Diseases of the Womb, Liver and nervous Debility, Diseases of the Digestive Organs and Kidneys, All cases of the Throat and Lungs, and all other constitutional and long-standing complaints. A short trial of this treatment will convince the most incredulous, THAT THESE COMPLAINTS, NO MATTER HOW OBSTINATE, CAN BE CURED. For further particulars, apply to Dr. HEINE, 74 West Houston street. N.B. Persons who have unfortunately contracted any disease by improper means, and prefer the attendance of a regular and experienced Physician, can be cured by this new treatment without the ever being discovered that they are sick. ap4,140,24ac

READER, PERUSE THE FOLLOWING testimonial and then judge of its factsfor yourself.

ASAHEL OLIN, of Brooklyn, N. Y., a well known citizen there, had suffered from hepatic complaint for years, without permanent relief, until he tried AYER'S PILLS, which taken according to the directions for the complaint, restored him to health in a few weeks. After an interval of some months he had had no return of the complaint.

Geo. W. Dixon, of Hempstead, Texas, had an abscess on his neck, which broke and wind pipe, and discovered about one third of his lungs. It kept the part affected covered with a scab, and being often a raw sore, was of course very troublesome and painful. It so much impaired his health as to enable him to labour and prostrated him in constant suffering. All medical aid failed him until he took AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which cured him. He also still shows some scars from the abscesses, but is in otherwise as sound as a dollar.

Joseph H. Rhodes, Esq., an eminent lawyer, of Mount Jackson, Va., took a cold which settled on his lungs. A severe pain set in, and he was confined to his bed. A cough which was not checked by the unmitigable syrup forms of expectorants. When reduced very low he commenced taking AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, which soon checked the cough, and in a few days he was entirely well. Yours truly, J. H. RHODES.

HOMEOPATHIC MEDICINES.

SUCCESS IN BUSINESS.

No business may be fully successful which is not founded on a real fitness of things, the articles made or sold must have intrinsic merit, and supply a public want. Success, arising from the skilful trap of advertising, or the tricks of trade, or some diversion and display, will be only apparent, and in the end but delusive operation, and three weeks time him.

Merit in an article supplies a public want, and fairly merits its remunerative success. Success and prosperity in business is merely a question of time. It may be retarded by adverse influences, or speed by preparing minds in the end it must come.

SIMPKINS'S HOMEOPATHIC SPECIFICS had their origin in a great public want—Medicines for all to use who desired a healthy life—Medicines that Father, Mother, Nurse or Traveler could always have by them, and always rely upon; so simple that a child could set to made in their selection; so harmless that all existing them with implicit confidence; and so efficient that they invariably proved, by their effects, that they were the universal and necessary of life, and never are ready sick, or have need to call in physician.

Homeopathic treatment could seldom have cured those chronic diseases which have been the bane of their life, and upon which they have spent hundreds in vain, and among the million who use them, none are found to question their purity or efficacy.

Yet no one proof is found without its evil, and no genuine article is counterfeit, so, under the shadow of the name of SIMPKINS, a number of fraudulent "specifics" and "Remedies" have sprung up, whose chief office is to bear inveterately distinct to the value of the original. All these spurious productions are to be distinctly marked, and known to the wise as counterfeit, and to worthless.

FEMALES OF ALL AGES ARE MORE or less afflicted than men—and why? The reason is plain. Men generally speaking, are more or less engaged in active employment, and have the benefit of more air; while women, especially those who are married, are confined to decay, attending to their household duties, and if woman could obtain given a dose of Pills or Powders, which not only weakens but often destroys the frail and feeble constitution. If man feels tired and weakly, seen rose brandy, ale or wine. The difference between the two. Woman need strengthening remedies as well as man, and more so, but not of the same nature. In Dr. Anderson's FEMALE LIFE CORDIAL, all that could be desired to give strength and energy to the female system, will be found; and for all those diseases to which the female system is subject, there is nothing which will be found more beneficial than this Cordial. It has been thoroughly tested, and in no case has it failed. It is very pleasant to the taste, and will not cause nausea to the weakest. Nothing of a deleterious nature is used in the preparation, and may be taken at all times with all safety. Persons in the use—all that are afflicted—and before the heat of summer sets in, you will find that your health in every respect, has greatly improved. PRICE $1 PER BOTTLE.
