State Rights Still Advocated at the South.

If the late war was decisive of anything, it certainly settled in the negative the question of unlimited State Rights. It was the difference of opinion upon that question which generated nullification in South Carolina thirty-three years ago, and which then threatened the stability of the Union. It was the same dispute which, after thirty years of agitation, culminated in civil war, and it was upon that issue that the rebellion was brought to a close. Therefore, the question now ought to be irrevocably settled. It ought to be clearly understood by the people of every section, and of every political hue, that the States have not unlimited rights, and that they are not absolutely sovereign. Yet there is a very large proportion of the Southern people who still cling to the fallacy which led them into rebellion. They still hold to the belief that the States are strictly sovereign, and that the war has left this troublesome question just where it was five years ago. The Lynchburg REPUBLICAN, an able and apparently sincerely loyal journal, speaks the opinion of a large class—possibly nearly all—of the people lately in rebellion, as follows:

"But in thus submitting to the Federal authority, and yielding our support to the reconstruction of the Union, we wish it to be distinctly understood that we do not yield one iota of those great and fundamental principles of strict construction, and State rights, which we have always maintained, and which we regard essentially necessary to the successful operation of our complicated system of free institutions, and the advancement of civil and religious liberty."

The argument advanced by CALHOUN, by his political successors, and which is indicated in the above extract, is this: That the Union is simply a copartnership of the States, indefinite in its duration, and from which any one of the parties has the right to withdraw at pleasure. It was upon this ground that South Carolina justified the act of secession; it was the same that induced the other States to follow in its wake, and it is the probable plea that Mr. DAVIS will introduce to justify his own course, upon the occasion of his forthcoming trial. Now, this doctrine is not only erroneous but dangerous, and the Southern people ought to know that so long as it is maintained and advocated, there can be no security against future rebellions. We do not suppose that there is the least danger of another outbreak in the South, against the authority of the Union, at least by the present generation. But it should be remembered that the pernicious doctrine of unlimited State rights has been advocated ever since the Union was formed, and that it was only by long and persistent agitation of the question that the Southern people were brought up to the point of open rebellion. So it may be again. If the principle alluded to shall survive the war and reconstruction, why may not the seed take root and again spring up into rebellion thirty-five or a hundred years hence? For the welfare of the South and of the whole country, the principle of absolute State sovereignty ought to be allowed to pass away with the rebellion—the cause and the effect should go down to oblivion together. Absolute State rights are incompatible with the perpetuity of the Union, and to advocate them is only paving the way for future trouble. The Southern press, particularly, ought to endeavor to disabuse the public mind of this old and fallacious idea, and to teach the people that, while the States are supreme in all matters of local government, they are bound to the Union by a ligature that can never be severed.

Cold Weather Robbers.

With the approach of cold weather comes the harvest-time of the extortioners. Never did expectant cat watch more patiently for the emergence of errant mouse from his hole, than do the extortionate dealers for the coming of the cold season, when the necessities of the people afford an opportunity for merciless fleecing. They firmly believe in the Biblical doctrine that "there is a time for all things," and they know that their time comes with the chilly weather. In the summer season, when the ample facilities of transportation enable consumers to buy directly from producers, in case of outrageous charges by dealers, there are fewer attempts made to swindle the public. The wily speculators well know that the building up of a direct trade between the farmers and consumers would be the ruin of the middle-men, and hence they, to a great extent, avoid giving cause for this course during the season of its practicability. They quietly await their opportunity, buy up large stocks at cheap prices, and when cold weather diminishes the production and curtails the means of transportation, then it is that the extortioner mentally exclaims to the public, "Now I've got you!" Already we have an inkling of what is coming. The speculators, who during the past season have been making extensive operations for fleecing the public, can hardly wait until the favorable time comes, and hence are even now cautiously advancing prices. They know that the rich sugar plum is fairly within their grasp, and in their eagerness to devour it, they are inclined to take a nibble before the time for the feast. The chief items of necessary expense in cold weather are flour and coal, and we observe that these commodities have lately been advancing cautiously, as if the speculators, who now have immense stocks in store, were feeling to see how much advance the public would bear without the danger of a movement to avert the tightening clutch. From present indications, the prices demanded for coal and flour during the approaching cold season, will be quite as high as they were last year, when gold was up in the high figures. And there is no shadow of excuse for such imposition. The wheat crop of the present year has been good, and although not quite up to the average, there will be an abundance for home consumption and a balance for exportation. Coal ought to be nearly one-half cheaper than it was last season. The alleged cause for the high prices a year ago was the outrageous demands of the coal miners, and the enormous consumption by the Government. But there is no such difficulty now. The disbandment of the army and navy has made labor abundant, and reduced the Government demand for coal to a mere fraction of what it was last Winter. It is not necessary, however, to investigate the excuses which these speculators adduce to cover their extortion. They intend to raise prices to the very last notch that the public will bear, and the only remedy lays in combinations of the people to buy directly from producers, and thus scatter the meshes of these merciless extortioners.

Justice in Prussia.

THERE is probably no other Government in Europe so thoroughly aristocratic as that of Prussia, and none in which the line of division between the nobility and the common people is more clearly defined. The former class are allowed the utmost latitude, and the occasional killing of a poor man by one of the nobility is a matter of no consequence to the authorities. A case lately occurred in the city of Bonn which has created considerable ill-feeling not only in Prussia, but also in France and England. One of the Prussian nobles—Count EULENBURG—who is a nephew of HERR BISMARK, the Prussian Minister of State, happened to be passing along a street at night, in company with friends, when they met a small party of the common people, and in some way a dispute arose between the Count and a member of the other party. The result was that the Count drew his sword and run it through the commoner. It proved that the murdered man was a Frenchman, named OTT, a cook in the employ of Prince ALFRED of England. The murderer was not arrested, and after remaining in seclusion four or five days, joined the regiment of which he was an officer, and has remained at Bonn, without any apparent danger of punishment. The conduct of the Prussian authorities in permitting the Count to go unpunished, has called forth a storm of censure from the French and English journals, which is accounted for by the citizenship and occupation of OTT. The London TIMES, in discussing the subject, says:

"By the usage of civilized nations the persons of Ambassadors are sacred, because they represent their respective Sovereigns, and this exemption from the ordinary civil and criminal jurisdiction extends in practice even to their attendants and domestic servants. The concession of these privileges does not of course affect the criminal liability of any one who may injure them, but it at least places them under the special protection of the law. What is due to the Queen's Ambassador must surely be due to the Queen's son, and Lord NAPIER was promptly instructed to apply for redress to Berlin. Not only do his remonstrances seem to have been entirely unavailing, but it is stated that the Crown Prince of Prussia selected as his aide-de-camp, and took with him to Coburg, the brother of the very Count who had committed this murder."

It would seem from this language that the matter is becoming serious, and that the British Government is disposed to insist upon justice in the premises. The aristocracy in Prussia, and the old King at its head, deserve a lesson that they would not soon forget; and unless their oppressive and domineering course toward the poorer classes shall be soon discontinued, the Liberal party, which is now rapidly growing up in their midst, will terminate it in a summary manner.

Reconstruction in Louisiana.

THE New Orleans papers state that J. MADISON WELLS, who has been acting Governor of Louisiana under the Constitution adopted last year, has been appointed Provisional Governor by the President. It would seem from this action that the President has found it a difficult matter to untie the political knot in Louisiana, and that he has accordingly cut it. The government of that State, under the new Constitution, has been but little better than a farce, causing almost universal dissatisfaction. It will be remembered that it was adopted by a bayonet vote in New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and the few other towns at that time in Federal possession. The farcical nature of the whole proceeding was so plain, that when the Congressmen elected under the said Constitution claimed their seats at the last session, they were promptly refused admission, and since that time the government of Louisiana has been in a sadly muddled condition. The appointment of Governor WELLS to the office of Provisional Governor, admits of but one interpretation: that the President intends to follow the lead of Congress in refusing to recognize the new Constitution, and, also that he intends to nullify the whole concern, and start Louisiana in a new track—the same which the other reclaimed States are now on. We heartily endorse this policy, and our readers will recollect that it is exactly what the SUN advocated several weeks ago with respect to both Louisiana and Virginia. The political situation in the latter State is not quite so bad as in the former, but its new Constitution was adopted very much in the same manner as that of Louisiana, and its effects have been anything but desirable. The work of reconstruction in Louisiana will now be plain and straightforward, without those entanglements which have heretofore retarded it, as the result of the bogus Constitution.

Passing the "Dead Point."

TO-DAY, the SUN crosses the tropic, rising and setting at six o'clock, making the day and night of equal length. We now start out upon the cold season. For the next three months the days will gradually grow shorter, the weather colder, bringing overcoats and fires again into requisition. This should be a reminder to all, particularly the poorer classes, that the time is now very brief in which to make preparations for the approaching winter season. Without such preparation there will necessarily be much destitution and suffering. Close economy, frugality and industry at this time, may be the means of keeping the "wolf from the door" in mild-winter, and there certainly could be no stronger incentive to save than that. Persons of moderate means should scrupulously husband every penny, and cut down their expenses to the lowest possible figure, in order to be prepared for the contingencies that are likely to befall them.

Juarez Still Hopeful.

A letter from President JUAREZ to a gentleman in this city, dated El Paso del Norte, August 17th says:—

I have established here the seat of government, and I will to remain here some time, after which I shall fix my residence in one of the cities of the interior States. Our enemies will probably announce the dissolution of the Mexican Government, but you and our friends should not credit such an imposition. I shall not leave the Mexican territory. I shall fulfil the duty of preserving the existence of the only popular power established by the will of my fellow citizens, and I do not despair of the success of our cause when I see the Mexicans everywhere resisting the yoke of the invader, and maintaining the struggle in all our States.

The Fenians.—A Philadelphia Story.

The New York correspondent of a Philadelphia paper gives, what he professes to be, reliable evidences of the reality of the Fenian movement:

Fact First—That negotiations are pending for the purchase of eight ocean steamers, each warranted to carry one thousand men, with the certainty almost that the purchase will be made before the 1st of October.

Fact Second—That there have been immense purchases of arms from the Government by parties who are supposed to be identified with the Fenians, within the past fortnight, and that propositions for further purchases are now under consideration.

Fact Third—That one of the bank note companies of this city are now engaged in engraving bonds for the new Irish Republic. It matters not who are their employers, but I have no doubt the British Consul and his attaches know all about it.

I have it from good authority that the London TIMES' New York correspondent received instructions from his employers, by the last steamer, to "keep a sharp watch on the Fenian movement."

Music and Muscle.

At a recent meeting of the Board of School Controllers held in Philadelphia, two things were done that are worthy of special commendation. They decided to include in their estimate for the coming year $6,000 for the expenses of teaching music, and $7,500 for the purpose of introducing light gymnastic exercises into the schools. Music, says the LEDGER, is now taught in some of the public schools, but the public have to pay for it out of their own pocket-money. The lessons should be extended to all, and the expense should be charged to the School Fund. But, desirable as music is, as a part of our public school instruction, physical training is still more so; and the small cost at which a thorough system of calisthenics can be introduced, shows for what a pitiful sum we have been depriving the school children of a system of discipline and rational exercise that is of inestimable advantage. The number of pupils in the public schools is in the aggregate about seventy-five thousand, and the cost of introducing calisthenics will be about $7,500, or an average of ten cents a year for each pupil!

Tragedy in Cincinnati.

A colored man named Charles Ferguson killed his son James on Sunday last. The mother of the boy gives the following account of the murder:

My son came into the house and my husband, Charles Ferguson, was lying in the kitchen. My husband called to James and asked him to go after some fish-hooks. The boy said, "Father, I have been after some and cannot get them." Then his father said, "You have been lounging about all the afternoon, and you are a trifling ——." The son replied, "Father you must not call me that name, for I will not stand it." Then the father repeated the same names a hundred times or more, and added other insulting names. The son replied, The father then sprang to his feet and jumped at the deceased, and said, "I will murder you." I then blew out the candle, and ran out of the house, I heard my son, the deceased, say, "You have stabbed me." I then said, "I will have you arrested." He said, "You will, ha?" and came after me. I ran into one of the neighbor's houses and concealed myself, for I was afraid he would shoot me. While in the room concealed, I heard the report of a pistol, and said, "There, he is shot." I came out, and sure enough, my son was lying in the room shot through the head. My husband has threatened to kill me time and again, and no one knows how much abuse I have received at his hands. I cannot say whether my son had the hatchet (found near him) or not. I never heard him threaten to injure my husband.

Financial News, Markets, &c.

New York, Wednesday, Sept. 20, 6, P. M.—Gold has been very steady to-day at 143¼ a 144¼. The general stock market was fractionally higher, comparing the latest quotations of the two days. Governments were firm with a light demand. The loan market was quiet and easy at 5 a 6 per cent. Commercial paper was dull, and passed at 6½ a 9. Foreign exchange was firm in consequence of the limited supply of bills, but the demand was small, the transactions ranging from 109½ a 110. The entire revenue receipts from internal taxes, from the first day of last July up to yesterday, amounted to $80,479,592 41. This far exceeds expectation. On 'Change to-day Flour was 10c. a 15c. better. Wheat was 1c. a 2c. better. Corn was 1c. better. Oats were dull and heavy. Pork was quiet. Beef was steady. Lard was dull, and Whiskey was steady, closing a little firmer.
