THE COMING CHRISTMAS.

Wonders of the Shop Windows—Preparations for the Holidays—A Chapter for the Little Folks, and Hints for the Older Ones.

The streets are beginning to look like Christmas. People are about considerable, as poor Artemus Ward would say, and they are of all sorts—young and middle-aged, as well as old, ancient, and venerable. To be sure, they are mostly of the female nature; but that is as might have been "expected, you know," for who have so much good reason to rejoice in the eighteen hundred and sixty-eighth Christian return of this gay and festive season—this holiday for universal man all through Christendom—as those who belong to this interesting gender of persons? They are the dwellers of the house where the children dwell—the good, handsome little boys, and the better, pretty little girls—who, of all things, must not be forgotten when Santa Claus comes to make up his jewels on Christmas Eve. This is the reason why so many extra people are flooding the streets just now to overflowing. They have a great number of "young folks" to think about, and to provide presents for against the day of presents. The shops never were so busy; for the mothers, and sisters, and aunts, the fathers, and brothers, and uncles of the little ones do constantly keep going in and out of these places to buy things, and have them ready when Santa Claus comes to fill the expectant stockings which "Bob" or "Missy" has hung over the foot of the bedstead or against the hearth, hoping to catch a "big haul" of nice things. We walked down Broadway yesterday on purpose to see how Christmas was getting on; and we can tell the boys that he is getting on "pretty well, thank you!" He begins to look as jolly as a fellow can very well look before he is born, and that is saying a good deal, isn't it? Through the mist and the snow flakes we can hail him looming into sight by a very small stretch of the imagination. His round, red, laughing face makes everybody glad, and although he has a bald pate and gray hairs on the top of his poll, his eyes have in them the freshness of a dewy morning in May, and his heart sings merrily in him like a nest of thrushes and blackbirds. He means to come into town, not "on a little pony" this time, but in a grand sleigh drawn by a whole army of Esquimaux dogs; and instead of a "foot-or-in-his-cap," which used to be the ornament of "scrambling heroes" in the days of Auld Lang Syne, he will bind his brows with everlasting, and garland himself with prickly holly and mistletoe, whose red and amber berries will flash in the moonlight like rubies and topaz jewels.

The market stores are already full of fire, and Norwegian pines, and holly and ivy bushes; and outside before the doors there is a little forest of these delightful trees, to cheer the eyes and bring bright pictures of old Christmas times to the front of the memory. The friends of our young folks aforesaid crowd these places, as they do all others where there is any nice present to be bought for them. See! there is a jolly waterfamilias who has just bought a great spruce tree taller than he is himself! And what happy faces he makes ever it!—thinking of the pleasure it will give his brave little boys and girls and all their young friends when it comes to be set in its drawing-room, and made to grow big, and sweetmeats, and bonbons, and apples, and pears and oranges! He likes the conceit, too, of compelling an Arctic region tree to bear all the fruits of the tropics. Now he has called an express wagon, and sent it off to what we will wager is a happy household—somewhere uptown.

All the windows on Broadway are dressed as if for some great festival. Well! Christmas is a festival, and he must be a surly dog who don't mean to put on the mask of the time, and be as jolly as a monk on a saint's day. Every tradesman has put forth his choicest and newest goods, to attract everybody else to buy his wares, and give them away for the sake of love and Christmas. The endless panorama of these shops is not only a refreshing picture to look at, but it is also no bad barometer of New York civilization. Broadway is in fact New York, just as Paris is France, and what a vast amount of wealth is displayed through all window-panes! The old hags pore out and the new lots come in. There is the jewelry man with his wonderful Alaska diamonds set in 18 carat gold, and each ring, eardrop, locket is called by the most wonderful name. There is the florist, who shows us mighty bouquets of camellias, Japonicas, violets, daphnes, carnations, orange flowers, tuberoses, and tea roses—a sight enough to ravish a man with its exceeding beauty. Then there are the dry goods stores with their silks, satins, moirs antiques, chêné silks, Amazon velvet cloaks, and cloths, Biarritz, Empress, and Roman. But the confectionery and toy shops are the story of that Broadway just now. During our memorable itinerary, after the curiosities of Christmas, we saw trees placed in windows, growing scintillated drops, almonds, plums, and other sweets and fruits; while at their roots were roosters, rabbits, pussy cats eating mice, and cows waiting patiently to be milked, poor things! and would have to wait. Inside, the long store was decorated with flags and bunting, and all along the sides were stalls lighted up with gas and the bright eyes of pretty saleswomen, and combining, we do believe, in the aggregate, every conceivable human want, from a pin to a silver teapot. Such glittering piles of use and bijouterie we have rarely seen. It beat the bazaars at Constantinople, and only wanted Chinese lanterns to equal a Chinese paradise. Near each stall was a glass case—and in some of them there were the queerest things! Standing against the panes below, for example, were figures of kings, and queens, and courtiers, dressed in full costume—quite fancy-like figures, and one could make a fairy tale out of them such as boys would like to read, and court girls too. Well, just in the next compartment above them were two dolls' theatres, where Sambo and Dinah were dancing on the tight rope to a band of music blown from the trompets, and drums, and fifes, and flutes, and forms of a motley company of dwarf musicians. We thought how some boys we know would have clapped their hands to see that sight.

We came to one window which was a real sunburst of crimson. There was a queen with a wand in her hand and a tiara of stars round her head, dressed in a crimson gauze-like dress, and riding on a white bull with fire-breathing nostrils. There was an old Polichinelle fellow, very tall, with a pyramid hat on, under which the long, straight, white hair showed itself against a red tunic. There, too, were gay Tom-fools dressed in parti-colors and spangles, with asses' ears and bells to them, grinning as for a wager one against the other. There were old New England women with great bonnets, no "bustles," and straight gowns, having on large red shawls, which were not so red after all as the old women's faces. There were old men with monstrous hats and bodies, and little bits of legs, which the first sharp frost would crack like a bit of glass. Add to these monsters with masks, and men with the heads of geese, and buzzards, foxes, and horses, and you may get some idea of the medley.

But the king of the toys in the estimation of a whole crowd of boys we saw around it was a red man and a black man doing a match at wrestling. The shop boy pulled the string, and as if they went neck and heels and arms, hitting, kicking, flooring, until either they had had enough of it or the shop boy was tired of keeping them going.

There did not seem to us to be much improvement in the nature of the toys this year over any other year of the past. There was more variety; but still it was tops and whistles and drums that had the most attraction for Young America.

Christmas will be here directly. He is en route already. Those with good ears might hear the thunder of his horse's hoofs over the mountain tops. Let us all give him a jolly, hearty welcome with the olden hospitality.

Board of Councilmen.

The Board met at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. In the absence of the President, Councilman Simons presided. A resolution was laid over directing the Comptroller to draw his warrant in favor of D. THE ERIE RAILWAY WAR.

Affidavit by Mr. Belmont—Argument of Mr. Vanderpoel on the Receivership Motion, and Reply of Mr. Rapallo.

SUPREME COURT, CHAMBERS—BEFORE JUDGE CARDOZO.—August Belmont et al., agt. The Erie Railway Company et al. The motion to rehear, and to vacate or modify the receivership order in this case, the argument of which has been proceeding for several days, was again before the Court yesterday.

The case having been called, Mr. Vanderpoel stated that in connection with the order to show cause why a reargument should not be had, granted by his Honor, there was served upon the Receiver, and also upon the counsel for the plaintiffs, an affidavit of Mr. Belmont, stating that actions have been commenced in the Erie Railway Company against Mr. Vanderbilt to recover moneys claimed to have been paid him upon the settlement of the former suit; and that the similar suits had been commenced against Messrs. Drew, Work, and Schell. Also, that the Receiver and planiiffs had been served with copies of a complaint in an action commenced by the People against the Erie Railway Company, and the order made thereon by Judge Gilbert, as new owner. However, was to be introduced upon this motion to vacate or modify the order appointing a receiver. Mr. Rapallo said that on the part of the plaintiffs they had no objection to read a short affidavit by Mr. Belmont, and the answer of Mr. Drew in this case. Mr. Drew in his answer states that the certificates of stock stated by him as Vice-President of the company, were issued in blank, to be used in the usual course of business of the company, and that he had no knowledge of the purpose of converting bonds into stock, nor without his knowledge; that in lieu of the Erie millions of bonds in February, 1866, he was never requested about a further issue of stock, nor was he present at any of the meetings of the Board of Directors when this was ordered, nor was he consulted in any such issue. He therefore asks that the complaint be dismissed as against him, without costs.

The following affidavit of Mr. Belmont was then read by Mr. McPherland:

City and County of New York, ss.: August Belmont, being duly sworn, says that he is one of the plaintiffs in this action; that the same was commenced by him and his co-partner solely for the purpose of compelling a proper administration of the affairs of the Erie Railway Company, the said plaintiffs then owning 4,000 shares of the stock of the said Company, which they had purchased in good faith for cash, and without any knowledge of or suspicion at the time of such purchase, of the fraudulent practices such are set forth in the complaint in this action. That the said action was prosecuted in entire good faith, and solely for the purpose of establishing the rights of the plaintiffs in the premises, and that no other person or persons had or having interest in the said litigation other than the said plaintiffs, and that the same was not commenced by the plaintiffs, nor is the same prosecuted in the interest of or for the benefit of, in any way, directly or indirectly, any person other than said plaintiffs. That neither deponent nor his co-plaintiff is now nor has at any time been engaged in any speculation or transaction in the stock of the said Company respecting which reference is made to shares of stock set forth in said complaint; and that neither of them have at any time made or been interested in any short sales of said stock, or in any business, speculations, or transactions touching the same, except as connected with and growing out of their aforesaid purchase of said 4,000 shares.

AUGUST BELMONT.

Sworn to before me, this 17th day of November, 1868. GEO. H. STARR, Notary Public.

Mr. Vanderpoel said they now had before them all the papers which were to be read on the two motions on argument upon his motion. He didn't see that the answer of Mr. Diven, which had just been introduced, made any material change in the facts of the case as they stood before. It would, therefore, be wholly unnecessary for him to recur to it further. The first point to which he wished to direct the attention of his Honor, was a subject he originally conceded with the opening of the decision, and the granting of a further argument of the motion—as to the question whether there should or should not be a receiver in this action. He had supposed that the question of the power of the Court to grant a receiver, was a question of jurisdiction. Wherever the Court deemed it expedient, or wherever it deemed it to be in the interest of equity, was well settled. The counsel on the other side had cited a decision of this proper source a case to the contrary. Appeals, and had claimed that the Court had no jurisdiction to hear argument upon the question now before his Honor. His Honor would find that the case had a bearing upon or similarity to the question now before the Court, and that the Court there did not intend to overrule the established practice of the Court in many such cases. It was to renew the motion that the argument was now in progress. Twenty times every month, and at least twenty times every week, not brought on before the judge who granted the leave, but before any Judge who happened to be engaged in hearing at the time the motion was called in the regular order. So the practice was equally well established. It was not that the motion should be granted or denied, and new facts come to the knowledge of a party, or if a party be taken by surprise, the Court granted leave to renew the motion. One of the earliest cases was that of Stanford and Williams, 10 Wendell, 269. The counsel stated the facts of the case, and cited a large number of other cases in support of his position. He then took up the next objection that because an appeal was taken from the order of Judge Sutherland, the defendants had deprived themselves of the right to reopen this motion. It was a strange idea that his Honor would be induced to take in the case before Judge Sutherland only two defendants had been served with process—Fisk and Lane. The only notice Gould had was because the papers were handed him by his codirectors. There was no evidence that any of the papers had been served upon any other defendant—Gould or Lane. Yet under the order made in such a proceeding the seven directors were turned out of office—because that was the natural and legal effect of the appointment of a receiver—yet counsel say that some of these persons who were thus turned out without notice, cannot make an application for reopening the order, and ask to be heard, besides, in addition, one or two of them had taken an appeal. But counsel contended that such was not the effect of an appeal.

Judge Cardozo—It is not worth while for you to consume time upon that point. I have no doubt about it. The effect which Judge Emott thought would follow an appeal he considered purely imaginary. The only effect of an appeal, if a rehearing was granted, would be that the General Term would make such order as would be proper, dismiss the appeal, or defendants might withdraw their appeal.

Mr. Vanderpoel then proceeded to argue that upon the motion before Judge Sutherland the defendants were completely taken by surprise. The case, on the morning of the 2nd of November, stood fifth on the calendar. The regular call at that time had reached No. 138, and it was considered by counsel to the ordinary practice of the Court this motion could not have been reached in the order under several days. He did not call in question the power of the Court to do the motion up at any time; but they had a right to expect that the case would be reached, and that it was a surprise to them, and they had no full opportunity to prepare affidavits. The motion to vacate the receivership order was next referred to, and in reference to that, attention was called to the fact that the order was recommended by the people of the State on the recommendation of Attorney-General, one of a sign of which was to keep the property of the Company safe, and to prevent the officers of the Company in the meantime, from exercising control powers—from issuing new convertible bonds, or to issue stock in place of the old bonds, and generally in existence. This suit, counsel claimed, showed that no action for a receiver, like the present, could possibly be necessary. Mr. Rapallo then said that the duty which had been assigned to him was to present such matters as to the convenience his Honor might be induced consider that he had the power to dissolve the motion upon a proper state of facts laid before him, that he would exercise it in their behalf. Mr. Rapallo proceeded to argue that the plaintiff as a stockholder, had a legal right to bring the action and to obtain the relief asked for. The complaint was examined in detail, and compared with the affidavits made in the affidavits of Fisk and Gould, and it was claimed that upon the papers before the Court a proper case for the appointment of a receiver was made out. Before Mr. Rapallo had concluded his argument, the case was adjourned to 11 o'clock this morning.

The body was removed to the Morgue, where the inquest will be held to-day.

Exciting Chase—A Lunatic on a Dummy Engine.

About noon on Thursday, a dummy used for hauling freight cars from the Hudson River Railroad depot to Thirty-fourth street, was left on the road temporarily by Mr. Henry King, the engineer. During his absence, a lunatic named Ryan jumped on it, opened the steam valve, and started off down town at a rapid rate of speed. King immediately mounted a horse and rode after the lunatic, with whom he caught up near Canal street. When near Tenth street, a German huckster and wife, named Schaffer, in their wagon, attempted to cross the track, but were struck by the dummy and thrown out. Schaffer, who packed up, was supposed to be dead; but revived shortly after, although injured severely internally. His wife would have met a frightful death, had not officer A. C. Viger, of the Fifth Ward, who was passing at that time, seized her by the dress and pulled her aside. The wagon was a complete wreck, but the horses were not injured in the least. Schaffer and his wife were taken into a drug store and their wounds dressed. The engineer having regained his engine, had to knock the lunatic down with a piece of firewood before he could control him. Ryan would have been roughly treated by the crowd who had gathered about the scene, had not the officer above named secured him. Schaffer was taken to St. Luke's Hospital.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.

A Plan for Preventing Commercial Panics.

A special meeting of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday at their hall in William street, corner of Cedar, to hear an address by Dr. Jas. C. Hallock, Jr., "In explanation of a practical plan for the complete, immediate, and permanent control of all disturbances and adverse actions in commercial payments, otherwise culminating in panic." The Hon. Wm. E. Dodge presided, and explained the object of the meeting. He stated the pressure that had been brought to bear upon himself and the Secretary to have the call this meeting. He was waited upon by Mr. Hallock, Jr., who, without stating who the gentleman was that desired to address the Chamber, exalted his experience and the importance of the subject. Mr. Dodge having refused to call a meeting under the circumstances, the gentleman went around and procured the signatures of fifteen members of the Chamber, at whose request the meeting was subsequently called by the Secretary. Mr. Hallock then went around and procured other signatures to the number of fifty-five, and had the names published in connection with the call, and also sent around special circulars without the knowledge of the officers of the Chamber, and in direct contravention of the by-laws. Mr. Dodge explained that at the proper time he would suggest the requisite changes in the by-laws to prevent such interruptions in future. And furthermore, he declared that he would not remain President of the Chamber of Commerce if every man who desired to ventilate his views and get his name in print before the public, could use the Chamber for that purpose.

After this explanation, Mr. Charles Butler moved an immediate adjournment.

A young gentleman, apparently fresh from the schools, then opened his mouth to make an oration. He (he said his name, he replied, "I'm Jim son of Mr. Hallock.")

Mr. Butler renewed his motion, and said he deemed it a fitting rebuke for such a piece of impertinence—all merchants were say from their business and assembled on such a time and for such a purpose. The Chamber room is only adjourned.

Mr. Hallock's son subsequently made an explanation, which was in effect that his father was not in.

Several members who had received circulars stepped in after the adjournment, and discussed the affair as a good joke.

THE CITY.

LECTURES AND MEETINGS.—The sixty-sixth anniversary of the Philoclesian Society of Columbia College will be celebrated at the Academy of Music this evening.

Mr. De Cordova will describe in his humorous way the sayings and doings of "The Sprats at Saratoga," at Steinway Hall, this evening, for the benefit of the Midnight Mission.

Miss Susan B. Anthony will tell what she knows about "Woman and Work, and the means to secure to her equal place and pay," at the Bloomingdale Lyceum, Broadway, near 100th street, this evening.

On Monday evening, the Father Mathew T. A. B. Society No. 2 will give its sixth annual ball at Irving Hall. These temperance societies' balls are usually very recherché affairs, and this one will, of course, be no exception.

The third reception of L'Amitié Sociable will be held on Tuesday evening, at 420 Union street, Brooklyn.

A distribution of medals and prizes will be made in the male pupils of Grammar School No. 15, 219 West Thirteenth street, near Seventh avenue, on Wednesday morning, at half o'clock.

Parker Pillsbury will deliver a lecture in the Brooklyn Institute, Washington street, near Concord, Brooklyn, on Wednesday evening, Dec. 23. Subject: "The French Revolution of 1793: Its Causes and Character." Tickets can be obtained of S. Dyas, 216 Fulton street, Brooklyn.

The entertainment and ball to be given by the Irving Literary Union for the benefit of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum will take place to-night at Allemania Hall.

The Warden of the Twenty-seventh Precinct Station House deserves a medal for humanity. He has saved the lives of nine would-be suicides, by cutting them down before life was extinct, after they had hanged themselves up by the neck, intending to take the leap into the dark. On Wednesday night a young man was arrested for drunkenness, and was so ashamed of his degradation that he tried hard to strangle out his consciousness. But the inevitable keeper came up just in the nick of time and saved him, let us hope, for better things.

MASONIC.—PERFECT ASHLAR LODGE, No. 604.—The following named officers of this Lodge for 1869: Ill. Jacob S. Hill, W. M.; F. J. Twomey, S. W.; A. Drew Darling, J. W.; W. Wm. Sinclair, Secretary; L. C. Franke, Treasurer.
