COL. J. WOODRUFF LEWIS.

The Vindication of an Honorable Man—Sequel to the Strange Career of an Army Lieutenant.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: Some time since you published what purported to be the "Strange Career of an Army Lieutenant," in which the basis of a single fact was made to bear the burden of many misrepresentations. I do not blame your reporter. He received the statement from an enemy of mine, who has for years prostituted his position in literature by vainly seeking to elevate downright lying to the dignity of a fine art, and now seeks to vindy and crush a literary rival.

The criminal records of Dedham, Boston, and Charlestown fourteen years ago will show that this man—your informant—was and is something worse than the convicted liar the enclosed documents (for your private eye) prove him to be.

Heretofore I have believed this man partially insane, and allowed his scurrilous defamations to go unrebuked; but the gross and systematic libels, by telegraph and through the newspaper press, with which he has sought to injure me, can no longer be permitted. I have sued him, and propose to see if an intelligent jury will not vindicate the character he has so wantonly aspersed.

My military reputation needs no defence here. I was a private in one of your best militia regiments that hastened to the defence of the capital in 1861. I afterward held four commissions—the last a brevet—for gallant and meritorious services during the war.

And while I was fighting the battles of my country in the One Hundred and Second New York Volunteers, my calumniator was flying from the fate he had evoked, as a deserter from Company L, Ninth New York militia. In this connection I refer to the following testimonial, furnished me in 1863, by that noble old man and distinguished New Yorker, the late Hon. Elijah F. Purdy, Grand Sachem of Tammany.

(Copy.)

The undersigned, cheerfully unite in recommending Capt. J. Woodruff Lewis as a brave and gallant soldier, well worthy of promotion.

Elijah F. Purdy, Amos Herrick, Edward Manning, Daniel E. Delevan, Richard Winne, John Chaney, Casper C. Childs, Isaac Bell, Jr., Smith Ely, Jr., Richard B. Connolly, M. T. Brennan, Peter B. Sweeny, Douglas Taylor, Moses D. Gale.

I also insert the following, occasioned by my retirement, Jan. 1, 1870, from the position of City Editor of the only Democratic morning paper in Connecticut. It is from the pen of the jurist, poet, and scholar, Judge R. W. Wright, now private secretary to Gov. English of that state:

COL. J. W. LEWIS.

"Few persons have any just conception of the arduous duties and responsibilities required in the preparation of the contents of a daily morning journal, and particularly of that portion of them which occur in the small hours of the very hour of going to press. Very many of the events which excite the great attention at the breakfast table are written in what the sweetest bard of old Scotia called the "wee sma' hours." The labor is very trying on all concerned, and particularly upon those who have what is usually called the nervous or poetic temperament. Such men can seldom endure the labor for any considerable length of time.

One of the editors of this journal, the gentleman whose name is at the head of this article, has occasioned these remarks by his voluntary retirement from our editorial staff. His association with this journal for some months has been pleasant and profitable to us, but the labor was of a character to compel him, out of regard for his health, to sever his connection. In leaving us, his intention was to obtain employment in some weekly or evening paper, where we feel assured that his services would be a valuable acquisition. He is a gentleman of education and culture, a ready and spirited writer upon nearly all subjects, and especially well informed upon all the current topics of the day—the paper of which we refer.

Before the war, which he entered as a subordinate and left as the commandant of a regiment, Col. Lewis was a well known sketch writer, and his productions have been at various times a contributor to the leading papers of New York, Boston and Philadelphia. He is now engaged on a novel, which will appear from the New York Weekly, and we think will be of intense interest. He will remain in New Haven until the novel on which he is writing is completed.

In parting with Col. J. Woodruff Lewis, we feel that we had discharged our duty to a worthy gentleman with whom we had been most pleasantly associated. I we allowed this occasion to pass without an humble testimonial of our high sense of his services, his merits, and his fitness as a writer, and his unexceptionable deportment as a gentleman. Wherever he may be, he has our best wishes for success and happiness.

These testimonials are the more gratifying to me because, as they do from political opponents. I have always been a working Republican. A delegate to Pittsburgh and Chicago Soldiers' Conventions, and a Grand Commander, G. A. R.

The single fact in the article alluded to was that, three years since, and during my absence from the city, a confidential clerk employed by me—one A. C. Wilson—proved unfaithful to his trust, and gambled away about $1,000 of soldiers' money, along with $13,000 of my own. If I was responsible for the funds, I was not for the frauds, and long ago made assignments and transfers to meet the losses occasioned through my clerk's rascality. As to circulation of The SUN seems world-wide, I request, as a matter of justice to a brother journalist, that those papers that printed the slanders of my enemy give me the benefit of the publication of this.

Very respectfully, J. WOODRUFF LEWIS,
Late U. S. V. Brevet Lieut.-Colonel.
