THE STRUGGLE IN CUBA.

THE SPANIARDS PROVING THE ACTIVITY OF THE PATRIOTS.

How the Butcher Amuses Alexis—Gen. Maximo Gomez Thrashing the Spanish Army in Oriente—Arrival of Three Hundred and Thirty Wounded Spaniards in Havana.

Correspondence of The Sun.

HAVANA, March 2.—I refrain from detailing the festivities of this place in honor of our imperial guest, Alexis of Russia. He has been duly dined, wined, "bull-fit," and "cock-fit."

La España, an organ of Count Valmaseda, for the benefit of the Prince prints three columns of the largest kind of leaded text about the "extinct revolution." The author dwells on the physical force which Spain has at her command for the suppression of the revolution "already," as it declares, "extinguished," which force he states amounts to 60,000 regulars of the three arms of the service, besides 50,000 volunteers, and a big fleet. All this reads curiously even to one not conversant with the shameless mendacity of the Spanish press of this city, and must have produced on any man of common sense and moderate experience a suspicion that the definite object of a statement apparently so unnecessary must have been to CONCEAL SOME UNPLEASANT FACT.

For, if the revolution be suppressed, why maintain so enormous an army on the island when soldiers are so much needed in the Peninsula? and if it be not suppressed, and its proportions be as insignificant as stated, why not suppress it? However, some of the remarks of La Española in its fortnightly review of the 29th ult., are worthy of reproduction. After asking the Prince if he thinks it possible for any city to give such evidences of wealth during a state of war as those he will witness in this city, the author adds:

The insurrection exists to-day only in the minds of those who aspire to social changes. If have told you long ago that Cuba would replace Valmaseda. If the non-peace-loving and busy Indians were with Vega chief, if they did not recall them to mind by their childish reports of the capture of two or three machetes, and of that of a few wounded runaways, nobody would remember it. * * * Shrewd Havana merchants occupy themselves with the already concluded insurrection [illegible] they do not even read the official reports. The Prince's popularity rests in his palace. He is ever on the road, and studying the woods and byways.

This fawning hypocrite actually has the assurance to state that had Valmaseda not been called away from his arduous duties in the field to repair to this city to receive the Prince, he would already have captured the rest of the scattered and fugitive patriots!

WHAT THE SPANIARDS PROVE.

The very number of the paper containing this article proves that the insurrection is in full force. It proves, as I stated long ago, that all effort has been made to induce the papers of this city to discontinue the publication of all news from the seat of war, and that the effort has not succeeded. It shows that Valmaseda is fearful that Cuba is about to replace Spain. It shows that the merchants know by experience how utterly untrustworthy are all reports published here; for with sterling exchange selling at 25 premium and sugar scarce, they can hardly be indifferent to the causes of these virtually important facts. They prove that the cowardice of Valmaseda is so notorious that it is only on the advent of a "illustrious foreigner" that it is worth while to try to humbug anybody, and that his failure is so patent, and in view of the inequality of the contest, so inexcusable, that even the visit of the Prince is taken advantage of, as a drowning man snatches at a straw. As I told you before, Valmaseda has not dared to go in the country outside of any fortified seaport for over eighteen months.

GOOD NEWS FROM SPANISH SOURCES.

Of the real facts of the insurrection I can give you but little news, but the little I can give is from Spanish sources. The celebrated regiment of San Quintin has been badly whipped by Maximo Gomez in Guantanamo. The Spanish account, written by an officer of the regiment, and published in La Española, states that they went out of the coffee estate "Indiana" on the morning of the 15th ult., with a baggage train and artillery, to make a reconnoissance as far as Arroyo Blanco and Aguacate; that on the 16th, leaving artillery and baggage in charge of 150 men, they marched up a gulley and came upon the outposts of the enemy at 4 A. M.; that from that point they advanced about a league up this ravine, when the commander ordered the column to fall back upon the artillery, because the horses could not advance any further; that they came up to the point of junction of the waters of the gulley with the river Cuzco, and somewhere about there, on their retreat, came across and destroyed three new camps of the Cubans, comprising some 50 huts, and found six Cubans killed and numerous traces of blood. The next paragraph of this celebrated letter, which is as fully entitled to immortality as the "veni, vidi, vici" of Baron Munchausen, I translate verbatim:

After a short rest, which we took for the care of our wounded, and it being indispensable to retreat until we fell in with our baggage and artillery, which could not advance, and also because we were out of ammunition, the commander ordered that the wounded be placed in the centre of the column, between companies, and that our rear, which was composed of the 1st, 2d and 3d companies, should be formed by the 4th, 5th and 6th, halting at every 150 yards. Had a league further on, we began to be very roughly handled by heavy bodies of the enemy, who from the heights commanding the road and the road itself poured a terrible fire upon us. At times they rolled down huge stones upon our column.

At last the Spaniards got back to the place they had started from the morning of the previous day, and here follows

THE STEREOTYPED STORY.

Our losses were one killed, twenty-three wounded, one contusion, and many spent balls; those of the enemy must have been heavy, for they were under a heavy fire at close quarters for over eight hours.

From private and perfectly trustworthy sources I learn that the Spaniards in this foolhardy attempt were fearfully cut to pieces. They started out of the Indiana 800 strong, and lost over 300 men in the two days, and two brigadier-generals, Campos and Ampudia, were wounded. Maximo Gomez led the Cubans.

Although the gag has been partially put on the press here, it is impossible, even with all the care taken by the authorities, to prevent the heavy disasters which the Spaniards are suffering in the field from leaking out. The steamer which reached Batabano from Cienfuegos yesterday brought 68 wounded from that section; and the preceding steamer, which comes from Santiago Manzanillo, and Santa Cruz, brought 262 others.

OPERATIONS IN CAMAGUEY.

I have a letter from Santa Cruz, 23d ult., which proves conclusively how completely false are the assertions that the revolution is dead in Camaguey. It says:

Yesterday the lieutenant-colonel who had gone on on the Puerto Principe road with 100 men, came back. He had taken Fernando Rodriguez, a surrendered Cuban, which is also quite. The object of the expedition were to destroy a tannery and some salt works on the very gunboat's place, San Fernando, which is about 1 leagues from here and 10 from Principe, and to capture Mantic, which are very scarce here both. The Cubans in charge of the place fired upon them and drove them off. The Spaniards lost 2 killed and returned with is wounded. One of them was Rodriguez, shot in the arm—as without any cattle.

Several skirmishes are officially reported in the vicinity of Moron, in which three negroes were killed, one captured and shot, and four negroes and one captured, of whom one was wounded; and again in the vicinity of Villa Clara, all of which prove conclusively that the revolution is slowly but surely extending westward.

Accounts from all parts of the island continue to represent the crop as a very short one. The decrease is, of course, attributed not to the revolution, but to the inclemency of the weather.

Negroni Minister of the Interior, Randi Minister of Police, and Gen. Kanzler Minister of War. Mgr. de Mérode and Cardinal Antonelli detest each other, and each is at the head of a large party. De Mérode, an energetic and apparently earnest man, directs the extreme Opposition party with the Jesuits and Ultramontanes, while the more sceptical and moderate Antonelli is supported by Cardinals Berardi, De Lucca, Silvestri, di Pietro, Amjot, and Ciarelli. The Pope is equally friendly to both parties.
