THE FINE ART OF SNORING.

MEN WHO WRAP THE DRAPERY OF THEIR COUCHES ABOUT THEM.

A Challenge Accepted—Prospect of an Interesting Trial.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I hasten to accept the challenge of Barney Wall of Philadelphia, printed in THE SUN of the 13th inst., wherein he desires to match Charley Vogel, the celebrated trout fisherman of the above place, for his snoring qualifications against any man in the country. I will match W. F. Price of Madison, N. J., against Vogel for $500 a side, the match to take place on Feb. 1, at Newton, N. J., that locality being recommended by the party named, he being familiar with the beds at the hotel in the above town. Price is not much of a hand at trout fishing, as his abhorrence of water is well known, but he is an expert in the art of making music through his nasal organ, and he will give Vogel ten minutes start, overtake and distance him. My man is ready at any time, as his fondness for sheep is well known to the sorrow of his many friends. During the match I will introduce a young blood, a cooper by trade, who has no superior in a somnambulistic way, and who will perform while asleep some of the most astounding feats on record. Mr. Robert Barnwell of Philadelphia will act as referee, as his knowledge of the above arts is universally admitted to be of the highest order. Barney Wall will be accommodated by addressing the undersigned, care of Delmonico's, New York, or calling at Pier 19, North wharf, Philadelphia.

Very respectfully, JAMES DAVIS.
NEW YORK, Jan. 14, 1873.

Riley's Thunder.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I read in THE SUN of yesterday, with mingled feelings of pleasure and contempt, of the mediocre achievements of several snoring characters, to whom, I am sorry to say, you have given undeserved prominence, for their performances are as the murmuring of a babbling brook compared to the unearthly efforts of my man, who some time ago resided in the neighborhood of Twelfth and Walnut streets. He had the pleasure of awaking a bit house undisturbed, for the denizens of the portion of our town deserted their houses in despair, declaring they were haunted, and to a person remaining in any one of them over night it would really appear that they were. As my man retired about 11 o'clock, of course these mysterious meanings and wailings would commence shortly after, and continue until about 6 in the morning. Now I, being an intimate friend of Mike, knew perfectly for that is the gentleman's name; his place of business is 431 Walnut street, knew very well that these mysterious sounds were simply his nocturnal performances. He subsequently moved to the weird and wild attractions of the Neck. To this day people being out after 11 o'clock at night carry umbrellas even if it is a moonlight night, for the supposed howling resembles thunder so accurately that all who hear him very naturally suppose it is going to rain. My man does not seek notoriety, but nothing does he like to match him against any man in this or any other country for from $10 to $1000 a side. Yours truly, WM. ELLIS, 431 Walnut street.
PHILADELPHIA, Jan. 15, 1873.

A Reportorial Snorer.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: What strange things do occur nowadays. Your valuable paper has proved that there are persons in this community who delight in the peculiarities of that portion of the disturbers of the public peace known as snorers. To all such I cheerfully recommend Mrs. Thompson, the reporter, of Morris ave. His snoring is sublimity itself. It would make a dead man hear, and deafen one who could hear. No boarding house will harbor him. His innocent amusement don't draw a crowded house, and the damned fools don't come to his assistance during his sweet slumbers in unstimbles. When on a visit, his friends never press him to remain over night, no matter how inclement the weather or the distance from his home. Morphine, opium, and various other opiates meet with a great sale in the immediate vicinity of the residence of this dispenser of midnight thunder. During the summer evening, when windows are open, pedestrians, strangers to the town, hurry on, thinking they hear the approach of a tempest. Is there no relief except Lynch law for the people of this town? Frantically yours,
Jan. 15, 1873. HIPPY HICK.

A Boss Snorer and Talker.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I have a man I will match for anything from a needle to an anchor in that manly art of snoring. His name is Tom Monday, and he can be found at the Hone House, 732 Broadway; and not only is the boss snorer but the boss talker as well. He has been known to talk a man to sleep in three and a half minutes by the clock. But of his snoring no one can judge what it is like unless he saw the burning of Barnum's and heard the burning timbers and bones. He was standing by a lamp post one night and fell into a doze, when he merely gave a little ripple as a prelude of what was to follow, and it broke all of the glass in the Hone House window opposite. Posting to hear from some one anxious for a match,

I remain yours, ALEXANDER P. FERSH,
732 Broadway, New York.

The Snorers' Tournament.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: As the question as to who is the champion snorist seems to be agitating the whole community, I beg to suggest a means by which the point can be finally settled.

My idea is to organize a grand snoring tournament, open to all comers, the prize to be a silver cup which I have now in my possession. This cup was originally competed for in 1869, and was then won by Nell Bryant, who outsnored seventy one opponents.

The editor of the North Side Times to be final referee, and to designate the time and place for the competition. Respectfully,
NEW YORK, Jan. 12, 1873. CHRIS. O'CONNOR.

Ready for the Conflict.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: Seeing a challenge in THE SUN, for no stated amount, I accept the challenge and will produce a man for the sum of $50 to out-snore any man you can produce. So fetch along your champion. Address E. Haviland, lock-box 675, Post-office, Poughkeepsie. If mutually agreeable I can produce a pair; and as a further consideration and to make the thing more binding, I propose to put up $10 forfeit, which is already deposited with the Courier of this place. SPORT.
POUGHKEEPSIE, Jan. 6.

A Youthful Champion.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I have noticed lately that claimants for the snoring championship are publishing challenges in your valuable journal. There is a person in West Thirty-fourth street by name Alex. Reiman. He is nine years of age, and I am willing to match him against any man, I claiming that he will outsnore him; I am also willing to put up from $10 to $500. I can be found with the money any time. Yours,
NEW YORK, Jan. 13, 1873. WM. GRAY, West Forty-fifth street.

The Greatest of All.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I see among the items in your paper of yesterday (13th inst.), that two parties wish to back up some "snoring policeman." Now sir, I know of a man who is a conductor on the Sixth Avenue Railroad who can double discount all the rest of 'em. Born in the State of Maine, and a man of music, his gentle breathing is heard even in the cellar of his barrel in the cellar when from the third flight. If these parties have money and real estate let them pay or play. WILLIAM C. WEST.

Mr. Hall Matched.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I have a man who I will match on snoring against any man in the country from $100 to $500. He has earned a great reputation as a snorer. If G. H. Hall means business let him say so. SAM R——.

Big Cow's Tribulations.

From the Chicago Times.

Big Cow, a lazy, good-natured, useless lump of an Arapahoe, stands six feet four, and weighs 275 pounds. He has kept himself free from entangling alliances; that is to say, he is an old bachelor, and his domestic habits are like those of a country school marm—he boards around. Last winter he did his loafing principally at the saw mill, as he found warm lodgings by the side of the engine, and the hands employed there furnished him his grub. Being short of help at one time, the engineer offered employment to the obese Arapaho, promising him a dollar a day for his services. Big Cow scouted the offer. "Big Cow no white man," said he, "Arapahoe no work. What Big Cow can do? He cut him hand off with that buzz, ugh!" But the engineer explained to him that his duties would come within the measure of his capacity. All that was required of him would be to carry the boards as they were riped and lay them on the pile. This seemed a simple task to the Indian, and he agreed to go to work. The next day the unusual scene was witnessed of the ponderous Arapahoe working steadily in the saw mill, larding the lean earth as he strode along, and puffing over his endless stream of boards like a bifurcated porpoise.

When the bell rang the next morning Big Cow was found in bed, sore in every limb, and groaning like a religious convert. He besought the engineer to fetch the white medicine man, as he had a clear conviction he was going to die. The trouble arose from the engineer having set the well-meaning Arapahoe too onerous a task. His flaccid muscles could not stand ten hours' strain, and the sustained effort had proved too much for his physical powers of endurance. He pronounced saw-mill industry "bad medicine," and declared that an Indian could not work, and the Arapahoe fell back to his former habits of vigorous loafing.

Result of Reading Dime Novels—A Young Buffalo Bill.

Yesterday morning a lady and gentleman called at Police Headquarters and stated that two boys of 11, named Edward Weatherhead and Henry Stillman, had left their home, 142 South Ninth street, Williamsburgh, at 8 o'clock on Wednesday morning, and had not since been heard of. This was the second time the pair had gone away in the same manner, as it appeared that young Stillman, who was a great reader of dime novels, had determined to carve his way to fame like Buffalo Bill. He purchased a large knife, with which he said he would go out on the prairie and slay buffaloes as fast as they should appear. The lady and gentleman, who, it is supposed, were young Weatherhead's parents, feared that the boys had gone on a similar expedition, they having been prevented previously by their recapture. Information of the runaways, with their description, was sent to all the police stations here and in Brooklyn.

The Boy Homicide.

Coroner Keenan yesterday took the antemortem deposition of William Maher, who was shot in the back on Thanksgiving Day by Seaman Rhines, a nephew of Mr. Schaffer, proprietor of Karl's Park, an exclusive account of which was published in Tuesday's SUN. There were no new facts elicited. The jury found that the injuries were administered by Seaman Rhines, and Coroner Keenan issued a warrant for his arrest. It is understood that Rhines has left the country.
