THE RAVAGES OF RABBITS.

How the Rabbits in Great Britain Ruin the Farms.

In many counties of England and Scotland there is an intense and bitter feeling among the farmers against the existing game laws, on account of the protection they afford to hares and rabbits. The farmers own the soil they till in but very few instances. The farms are leased to them by the great landholders on leases varying from one year to twenty-one years; and if nothing is said in the lease about the right to shoot game, which is an incorporeal hereditament in England it belongs to the tenant. But as a rule the privilege of shooting is reserved in the lease, and the landholder either enjoys it himself or lets it at a good price to some sporting friend. The shooting rents for a $1,000 a year on a farm which brings in a rental of $5,000 per annum from the farming tenant. As the farmer pays the full value for his lease he can ill afford to take the shooting himself, and even when he is willing to do so the landlord will often refuse to let it to him. Yet on this same farm the rabbits and hares will make sad havoc among the crops and destroy as much as the value of the shooting. Even when the farmer is allowed to shoot the rabbits on his land they breed in the outside coverts and in the night come out in droves and devour his crops. A high wire fence will stop the rabbits unless they are hungry, but the hares will clear it on a jump. The latter will come three or four miles for the pleasure of a revel among the turnip fields. In a field of this kind a hare will bite a chip here and there as he passes along, and every turnip so bitten is certain to rot. The wheat is trampled down for miles and often cut off or grazed down. The damage done to crops by these animals varies from £1 to £5 or more an acre, and the indirect damages are very large. In a county where game abounds some crops, such as carrots and winter vetches, cannot be sown at all. Oats are sown where wheat would have been, and the farmer grows as few roots as possible. Rabbits have been known to kill large trees, and in Forfarshire 53,000 young fir trees were destroyed by the hares. Twenty-five years ago Lord Hatherton and other eminent English agriculturists gave it as their opinion that the preservation of rabbits and hares was not to be reconciled with good farming. They increase so rapidly that in any event it would be difficult to keep their numbers within narrow limits.

How rapid this increase is the evidence of Mr. Walker of Aberdeenshire shows:

The former tenant of the farm I occupied told me that the first rabbit he saw on the farm was in 181; They did not know what the beast was, and they killed it.

Ten years after this he killed 272 rabbits on the same farm in a fortnight.

In the same county, Aberdeenshire, in 1865, 30,000 rabbits were killed in the course of the year on one estate.

The movement against the game laws is sustained by the Chambers of Agriculture in the different counties. These associations are composed of thousands of land owners and occupiers.

A Parliamentary committee was appointed last year to inquire into the working of the game laws with a view to their amendment. This committee, of which Mr. C. Ward Hunt is Chairman, has reported in favor of no longer protecting rabbits, but by a vote of 10 to 8 in the committee it was decided to report in favor of maintaining the protection now given to hares. It is probable that the Chambers of Agriculture and the farmers will be satisfied with this compromise report. The next session of Parliament will doubtless be endeavored by some latent strong debaters on this question.

A DESPERADO'S CRIME.

Five Policemen Assaulted with Deadly Purpose—Another Term in Sing Sing.

George Reilly, alias Rat Reilly, was at the bar of the General Sessions yesterday to be tried on an indictment for assaulting Policeman Charles H. McKenzie with intent to kill on the 28th of July last. Assistant District Attorney Russell was convinced that he could not convict of any higher offence than assault and battery, and accepted a plea of guilty of that, expressing the wish at the same time that the law regarding assaults with intent to do bodily harm was amended, and urging that the extreme penalty be imposed in this case. The credit of officer McKenzie says that the prisoner and several others then entered Mr. Eisenlohr's cigar store, Twenty-sixth street and Second avenue, on the day of the assault, and having called for cigars, refused to pay for them, and insisted at a purpose to go behind the counter and ransack the store. Mr. Eisenlohr was called from a back room by his son, who had waited on the party, but was ordered out by the prisoner, who pointed a pistol at him, and threatened to blow his brains out. When Reilly and his friends went, Mr. Eisenlohr stepped into the street to look for a policeman. He met Officer McKenzie, who was off duty that day, and told him his story. McKenzie pursued the men, and attempted to arrest two of them. Reilly drew his pistol again, and told McKenzie he would "bore day-light through him" if he did not let go of Lucas and men on whom he had placed his hands. McKenzie did let go, but instantly pounced upon Reilly, wrested the pistol from him, and notwithstanding a severe beating from the roughs, took his prisoner to the police station.

Reilly's record is very bad. On the 7th of April, 1868, he shot and killed John C. Smith at 134 West Twenthieth street in a quarrel originating from the fact that Smith had informed against him as a deserter from the army and professional bounty jumper. In December, 1868, he was convicted in the General Sessions to two years in Sing Sing. He escaped after a few months, and when recaptured tried to shoot the officer who recognized him. On the 6th of August, 1868, in Tompkins Park, he made a desperate attempt to kill another officer with a knife. It is McKenzie's the fifth policeman that Reilly is known to have assaulted with deadly purpose. On the application of his counsel, Col. Chas. S. Spencer, he was remanded until Friday for sentence.

HARDIN, OR WALKER?

A Runaway Marriage and a Subsequent Contest for More than $1,000,000.

Surrogate Hutchings gave four hours yesterday to hearing the contestants of George Hardin the millionaire's will. The direct examination of the second witness disclosed a new ground of contest. Mr. Borrill, counsel for the contestants, asked the witness what was told the banks as to the whereabouts of Mr. Hardin. Judge Porter objecting to the question, Mr. Barrill said that he asked it because one ground of contest was a conspiracy to conceal Mr. Hardin's death by Dr. Van Pelt, Mr. Ross, Mrs. Walker, and Mr. Corbett, one of her lawyers, who was in the court room at that moment.

Prior to calling the next witness, Mr. Borrill offered in evidence a deed made by Mr. Hardin, May 1, 1869, in which he described himself as an unmarried man. The deed transferred the property 14 Duane street to the third witness, Dr. Sarah Johnson.

The fourth witness, Atchison Hardin, a resident of Ireland, brother of the testator, and one of the contestants, on visiting this country in 1870 called on his uncle at his office. Did not hear that he was married. Proposed to spend Sunday in visiting him, a visit which his uncle declined, excuse by saying that he had no place to invite him to.

The fifth witness, Mr. Gray, a gray-haired son of the testator's sister, visited this country in 1850. Dined frequently with his uncle at Delmonico's, but did not see him at his residence. On the occasion of his second visit to this country in 1855, he was introduced familiarly at Mr. Hardin's home; supped there often and sometimes dined there on Sunday. The witness knew the lady of the house on these visits by the name of Walker, and addressed her as Mrs. Walker in the presence of Mr. Hardin and at all times Mr. Hardin addressed her as "My dear," and "Elizabeth;" and in speaking of her, said "the lady." On these evening visits, while after tea Mr. Hardin was reposing on the sofa, Mrs. Walker told the witness that she was born in Scotland; was the daughter of a Presbyterian clergyman; that while he was yet a girl she was persuaded by Mr. Walker to fly away with him; that after the marriage ceremony and they had been some time in America Mr. Walker wished to leave, but would bring or persuade her to go with him, and she knew not whether he went. She thought to California, and that she did gently and vainly scorned for him, and was unhappy.

Jone Morrissey Lost in Albany.

From the Albany Knickerbocker.

The Hon. John Morrissey got lost in Albany on Saturday night last. He arrived in Albany on Saturday evening from New York, where he had conducted the election bets on the result in the State. With this amount in his possession he started down town, a section of the city which ought to be well known to him. He certainly will never forget Arch street, the scene of the most bitter contests he ever engaged in. Yet John was lost and was found in a bewildered condition on Westerlo street. He was obliged to call upon a citizen for advice to find the Delavan House, and under the direction, started on his way, rejoicing that he did not fall into the hands of such Philistines as beset him many years ago in Arch street.

Judge Underwood Assaulted.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 11.—Judge J. C. Underwood, of the United States District Court, was assaulted here to-day by W. N. McVeigh, the former owner of the property in Alexandria, Va., which was purchased by Judge Underwood, under the Confiscation act. But few blows were administered by McVeigh, and Underwood made no resistance whatever. McVeigh called the Judge a hypocritical scoundrel, and charged him with robbing him and making his family paupers.

A MONSTER OF THE SEA.

A Fish Thirty Feet Long Shaped Like a Snake, with a Tail Like an Eel's and a Head Like an Alligator's.

From the San Diego Union, Oct. 31.

Messrs. E. A. Veazie, J. M. Spencer, and Dr. Squills went out sailing on the yacht Cygnet, and returned about 1 P. M. From them our reporter has obtained the following particulars of a remarkable sea monster which was seen by Capt. Charlesworth in a cove on the peninsula, almost opposite this city. After sailing up to the end of the peninsula and back as far as this cove, the yacht was brought to an anchor, and the party, taking their three shotguns, went off to the shore in the skiff. It was agreed upon that Messrs. Veazie and Spencer should remain concealed at that point until Capt. Charlesworth and Dr. Squills should go up and around the cove in search of curlews. These birds, which are considered very choice game, have been shot in considerable quantities at this place, and by keeping them flying back and forth across the cove the party expected to bag several messes.

At the upper end of the cove a fine flock of curlew was seen digging around in the mud on a point, and Capt. Charlesworth crept through the bushes to get beyond them so that when they rose and passed Dr. Squills he could get a shot, too. He had been gone but a few minutes when Dr. Squills heard him call loudly for him. He ran forward as rapidly as he could through cactus and Spanish bayonet, and met the Captain coming back in a very excited state. In a few words Capt. Charlesworth told the Doctor that he had seen a frightful monster fully thirty feet in length, shaped like a snake, with three sets of fins, a tail like an eel's, and a head like an alligator's. The head was a little wider than the neck, but very thick at the base, and had small eyes. It appeared to be covered with a dark skin, which assumed a yellowish cast on the belly. The three pair of fins were shaped like those of the sea lion, were each between three and four feet in length, the forward pair being much the heaviest, and situated about two feet back of the neck.

Capt. Charlesworth thinks the monster was at least two feet in thickness from the head back to within twelve feet of the end of the tail, from which point it tapered some, and assumed the shape of an eel's tail. He said the terrible looking thing had drawn itself nearly out of the water, and was lying motionless on the sand when he first saw it. At his approach the serpent fish raised its head and swung it directly toward him, and as he was not more than a couple of rods off, his only thought was to increase that distance. The captain says that he obtained a full view of it, and that he could not believe his sight until the monster moved its head toward him. Together he and the doctor approached the spot cautiously with their guns in readiness to give the terrible creature the four shots. They reached the bank just in time to see the sea-serpent swimming into deep water, with still a portion of his body in view. Both guns, which were charged with fine shot, were fired at him, and they think that several of the shot took effect. Messrs. Veazie and Spencer were signalled for, and when they came up they were shown the marks left in the mud by the monster. A careful watch was kept by the party for nearly an hour, but nothing more was seen of the remarkable sea-fish, and they think he is still in the cove, which is about half a mile long by a little over a quarter of a mile in width.

A Convict Dying of Voluntary Starvation.

From the Middletown (N. Y.) Mercury, Nov. 7.

On the 25th of May last Christopher Schwartz, a half-witted German, employed in the Goshen jail as watchman, was choked to death in an attempted escape by a negro named Alexander Diamond and a white man named Morgan. To this attempted escape and resulting murder another inmate of the jail, Jerry McDaniels, was privy. Diamond and Morgan were tried at the last term of the court, and were sentenced to ten years' imprisonment each. McDaniels was not tried, and remained in jail. On the 14th of October McDaniels refused to take either food or drink. He would give no explanation of his reasons, talking to no one but, persistently maintaining a moody silence. Two of his fellow prisoners united with him in this plan. Their names were Jerry Foley from Goshen, awaiting trial for petit larceny, and John McCarthy, from Milsburg, who was serving out a four months' sentence on a conviction for the same offence. All persisted in their refusal to eat or drink until they became very weak, and upon a physician's certifying that longer confinement would cause death, McCarthy was released and Foley was bailed by his friends.

No such luck was in store for McDaniels. He still persisted in his design. To the inquiries of the keeper as to the motive of his unusual proceeding he returned surly answers, and resolutely refused all proffers of sympathy and relief. In the early part of last week a physician who had been called said that he must take a tablespoonful of whiskey in half a cup of milk every two hours, or he would die. McDaniels took it three times and then closed his teeth when the cup was proffered him. He also refused to lie upon his bed, and so long as he was strong enough rolled off it to the stone floor as often as his attendant placed him upon it. He refused to see a clergyman, saying he was told that he had died, and when Mr. Baldwin, the turnkey, asked him if he wished to leave any message he merely muttered an oath, and at night when all was quiet he filled the jail with his imprecations. For seventeen days he took no sustenance so far as is known, with the exception of the few cups of water, tea and milk, and finally on Thursday, Oct. 30, he died. His death was fearful. He was conscious to the last, and died with an unfinished curse upon his lips. His death by his own deliberate act was permanent, a fitting end to a life that was not misspent in the good of humanity, and the self-inflicted agony was but a natural result of the undeviating cruelty that marked all his acts toward everything to which cruelty could possibly be shown.

Conundrums Propounded by a Lawyer.

To the Editor of The Sun.

SIR: I am one of the unfortunates who reside along the line of the Fourth avenue widening. I have seen in front of my house the middle roadway disappear, followed by the curbstones and street lamps, while a huge crack divided the sidewalk and threatened to send half of it into the roadway. The street below was dug up, the gas in Houston street was blown up a couple of about two feet in width, across which a wire rope is now stretched at a distance of some twelve inches from the ground, ever ready to trip and level the unwary traveller. The bridge at the street above me has been removed, thus compelling people to circuitously wind their way to and from home was as devious as that of Mr. Richard Swiveller from his lodgings. Still one way was open. I might walk to the street above and turn westward to Madison avenue, and I murmured not.

But the end was not yet. This morning the beginning of a trench appeared across this last outlet. The obstruction was so palpably unnecessary as to appear wanton. I spoke to the contractor and was informed by him that he had "orders to dig," and would do so "just as he pleased"; that he would take away my stoop if he saw fit; that I could go around and get in and out at the back of my house; but whether I was to clamber over the fences or he would kindly raze them, he did not state.

The straw proved to be the camel's back; the iron has at last entered my soul. Is civilization a failure? Is the American citizen of the nineteenth century below the railroad contractor merely as the villein, or clerk, or merchant before the robber baron of the middle ages? I pause for a reply. ONE OF MANY.
