THE KILLING OF MACNAMARA.

Trial of the Detective Who Shot an Innocent Man on His Hearthstone—The Helpless Widow and Her Three Small Children.

The trial of Patrick Leahy, the detective, for the shooting of Michael MacNamara was continued yesterday in the Oyer and Terminer. The court room and corridors were crowded, as on the occasion of an important trial. Capt. Irving and other detectives sat near the accused, while in a lonely corner the poorly dressed widow of the slain man hushed into quietude her three little children. The detectives in their citizens' attire were easily recognizable by their flushed, well-fed faces, and know-nothing expression.

Detective O'Reilly, who with Leahy and Williamson forced open MacNamara's door, swore that before breaking in they called out that they were officers. When they were bursting open the door MacNamara struck O'Reilly on the chest, knocking him against Leahy, whose pistol went off. When they burst in the door they asked if any one was hurt, and MacNamara answered that he was shot, but they didn't believe him. They asked him why he didn't let them in, as he knew they were officers. He replied that he didn't know who they were; that he thought they were thieves.

Captains Mount, Tynan, Irving, McDonald, McCaffrey, and others testified to the good character of the prisoner.

Patrick Leahy, called in his own defence, swore that Capt. Irving gave orders to arrest Dutch Harmon, who was suspected of killing a watchman at the Hudson River Railroad depot. When the detectives went to MacNamara's door, Reilly knocked and called: "Open; we are officers!" and pushed the door with his shoulder. A man with a shovel struck Reilly, who fell back on Leahy, and the latter's pistol, which was in his left hand, went off. They all held their pistols ready for self-defence. Leahy had his pistol on the ready and his finger on the trigger.

Officer Williamson gave similar testimony. District Attorney Phelps complained that the witnesses didn't open their mouths enough to be heard distinctly.

Judge Brady—That is because they belong to the secret service. (Laughter.)

The defence having closed, the jury were locked up for another night.

ASPHALT FOR FIFTH AVENUE.

Opposition to the New Pavement for the Fashionable Thoroughfare.

The property owners of Fifth avenue are not unanimously in favor of paving that thoroughfare with asphalt. Mr. John H. Sherwood, one of the heaviest real estate owners interested, says:

A good asphalt pavement could be laid, with a liberal profit to the company, for two dollars and a half a square yard. When the property owners' signatures were obtained for the petition no price was stated, but in the bill before the Legislature it is fixed at six dollars and a half, or nearly double that of the Belgian. About two years ago the patch of sample asphalt pavement was laid opposite the Worth monument, at the crossing of Broadway and Fifth avenue, and the company has kept it in repair ever since free of cost. In getting the signatures to the petition to the Legislature this specimen was used as an argument; but, had not every abrasion and flaw been carefully repaired, it would have been an argument against the proposed pavement. There is another serious objection with an asphalt pavement in Fifth avenue—the slope of Murray Hill will be impassable for horses in wet or icy weather. Its smooth surface will be like glass. The proposed pavement has certain advantages, and if put down at two or three dollars a yard, omitting the rise of Murray Hill, I would not object; but at six dollars and a half a yard it is decidedly undesirable.

THE BATTERY HOMICIDE.

The Debate which Became a Quarrel and then a Sanguinary and Fatal Fight.

Policeman John Gibney, who was fatally shot by Private Watchman John Given on the Battery on Saturday night, was buried from his residence, 59 Mott street, yesterday. Thirty patrolmen of the New street police, commanded by Sergeants Gaskill and Thompson, attended as a funeral escort. The interment was in Calvary Cemetery.

The inquest was held by Coroner Croker yesterday. John Given was attended by counsel. His face still bears the scars which he says were inflicted by Gibney in their struggle. Adam Halk, the German who was Given's partner in watching the Dock Commission office, where the shooting was inflicted, testified that in the first struggle the men were not ill-tempered, but Given seemed to have became exasperated by the severity of his second fall.

After other witnesses had been examined the jury returned a verdict against Given, and he was committed to the Tombs.
