A SILVER MINE WEDDING.

THE MARRIAGE OF MR. WILLIAM SHARON'S DAUGHTER.

The Social Event of the Pacific Coast—The Reception at the Mansion of the Great Rival of Jones—The Wealth of the Man who Expects to be Nevada's New Senator.

From the San Francisco Chronicle, Nov. 20.

The Newlands-Sharon wedding has been the talk of the town since the day when it was definitely announced, a month ago. For a much longer period, or since the betrothal was made known to intimate friends, it has been the theme of conversation in many private social circles. Every one has known that it was a love match. Mr. Newlands and Miss Sharon met by chance—the usual way; that is, in the gay rounds of polite society, more than two years ago. The acquaintance thus begun ripened into intimacy, and the intimacy matured into the tenderer passion, with the happy result now known to all. There are many reasons why the public should take a deep interest in the marriage. The great wealth of Mr. Sharon, his aspirations for local enterprise, his prospective political prominence, the magnificence of his domestic surroundings, the beauty and accomplishments of the bride, who is everywhere a social favorite, the talents and many qualities of the bridegroom, the splendor with which it was expected the event would be celebrated, all conspired to make the occasion one of general concern.

Invitations to the reception were issued to fully one thousand persons, including all who are prominent in San Francisco society. The weather was auspicious. The uninvited public began to gather as early as 7½ o'clock. They stayed outside, listened to the music at a distance, and gazed at the lighted windows and blank walls of the house. The uninvited filled the street from Powell to Mason on both sides, and in the crowd were persons of all ages and of both sexes, including many persons who seemed by their dress to be ladies. Carriages containing guests invited to the ceremony began to arrive shortly before 8 o'clock. They were admitted and ushered to their rooms by servants in full dress. W. C. Ralston, as the Master of Ceremony, was assisted by Warren Leland. The guests were received in the west reception room by Mrs. Newlands, a lady of courtly manners, and Misses Davis and Sherman, nieces of the host. Those who had been invited to the ceremonial were nearly all present at 8 o'clock, and made of themselves a most brilliant assemblage. The toilets were all elaborate and elegant.

THE HAPPY PAIR.

The bride, Clara A. Sharon, is a demi-brunette in style of beauty, petite in figure, and of winning and graceful manners. She is of a retiring disposition, shunning rather than coveting display. Although a quieter marriage and courtage by the sea would have coincided with her desires, yet she has proved and will prove herself entirely equal to all the emergencies of her high social position. To the graces of the true lady have been added such refinements of education and culture as the best schools in America and Europe could give and the highest personal associations impart. Miss Sharon is 21 years of age, having been born in San Francisco in 1853. Her first instruction was in the schools in this city. She spent a year at the convent at Benicia, and two years afterward at San Jose. She was abroad with her mother and sister for two years and a half, one year of which she passed at one of the most celebrated conventual schools of Paris.

The public concern in the bridegroom is, of course, only second to the interest taken in the fair bride. While it can not be claimed for him that he is rich in worldly possessions, yet he is beyond measure wealthy in all the sterling traits of young American manhood. A personal description of the bridegroom would represent him as a little above the medium height. He is 28 years of age. His features are regular and attractive. He has dark hazel, laughing eyes. He is well proportioned, has square shoulders, a good, round chest, and moves generally with a hurried s ep, as though trying to crowd five minutes into one. In manner he is frank and cordial. There is nothing of either exquisite or fop in him. His friends recognize in him the metal of true manhood, and if there be great wealth on one side in this match, there is unquestionably no lack of genuine worth on the other.

JOINED BY AN ARCHBISHOP.

The bridegroom being a Protestant, the marriage was what the Catholic Church calls a "mixed" one, and could not, therefore, be solemnized according to the ordinary ritual of the Church. But provision has been made for exercises of this kind. There are special services, plain and simple, which are used on similar occasions. The one used was the Ballin service, but the ceremony usually employed in solemnizing mixed marriages in California. Archbishop Alemany came some time before 8 o'clock, attended by Father Acolti, S. J., Father Pinos, O. P., and Father Hyacinth Durham, O. P. Only the last two assisted. As the time for the ceremony approached, the guests ranged themselves in the sides of the drawing-room, up the whole length of which the bridal party was to pass.

It was a quarter past 8 o'clock when the orchestra struck up the grandest of all marches, from the "Midsummer Night's Dream," the signal that the bridal party were approaching. Archbishop Alemany immediately stationed himself under the floral arch to await the coming, his assistants standing on each side and a little behind him.

The bearing of the bride was quiet and modest, but sufficiently dignified. She wore a dress of white satin, with long Watteau train, the front being entirely plain, while the train was superbly brocaded with imitations of ferns in cluster. The front was entirely covered and almost entirely concealed by point lace of elaborate pattern, arranged in three flounces, displayed over crepe de Rose, the flounces reaching to the train, and being terminated at each end by a bouquet of orange flowers and camelias. The bouquets were so massed that they concealed the seam at the side from the belt to the hem. The waist was of plain satin, cut high, with a point lace ruching about the neck. It was ornamented with two small bouquets of orange flowers and camelias, one worn from the corsage and the other at the throat. The sleeves were close-fitting and covered from the shoulder to the waist with point lace. Ruffles of point lace surrounded the waist, half concealing the tiny, white gloved hands. The veil was of rare mulline net, fully trimmed with point lace to match the laces of the dress, and the hair dressed with a wreath of pearls and delicate material. A fan of point lace, mounted with pearl colored pearls, completed one of the most exquisite bridal costumes ever worn by an American lady. The jewelry was diamonds of the purest water, the parure including a rich diamond necklace given by her father, and a beautiful diamond brooch, the gift of the groom, earrings, &c. She carried a small bouquet of orange blossoms, violets, and camelias.

The service was brief. The Archbishop and his assistants retired from the floral canopy, and the newly-married husband, having kissed his wife, took the place thus vacated. The lady then received the kisses and congratulations of her friends with a little gush of natural emotion. The guests, after greeting the couple, distributed themselves through the rooms, and dancing was not long after commenced.

THE RECEPTION.

Soon after 9 o'clock the guests began to arrive at the reception. They entered by the west door, a carpet having been laid to the curbstone. The mansion, with the great porch burning at both entrances, was brilliantly illuminated. The grounds were illuminated with several hundred Chinese lanterns. The rear balconies were enclosed, carpeted, furnished with chairs, and supplied with refreshments. Ordinary wines, liquors of every kinds, and lemonade were distributed about the house from the earliest hour, that all might partake who so desired.

The house was profusely decorated with flowers from top to bottom. In all the corners of the dancing room tropical plants were placed in rustic borders—palms of many kinds, all sorts of delicate ferns, orange trees, cedars, and rare exotic shrubs of every description. There had been prepared for the musicians below a sort of bower, surrounded by cedars, but as this proved to be too small for the score of players, they overflowed it, playing, however, quite as well in front. On the library table stood a cage covered with a mass of jessamine, mignonette, and other flowers, stand of carnations and camellias, surrounded by carnations of various hues, in rows neatly arranged, and interspersed with camellias. Baskets containing violets, heliotropes, roses, camellias, tuberoses, on the tables and book cases, and in front of all the mirrors in the house. The bower in which the newly-married pair received the congratulations of their friends was a triumph of floral art. It stood at the east end of the grand drawing room. The shape was that of three sides of a hexagon, each side containing an arch of flowers. Its four pillars were covered with white carnations and camellias and other white or delicately-hued blossoms. Above the arch were the initials of the bride and groom, an "N" on one side and an "S" on the other, delicately interwrought in white flowers and pythospertus.

THE MILLIONAIRE PAPA.

William Sharon, the father of the bride, was born on the 9th of January, 1821, at Smittfield, Jefferson county, Ohio. He lived at home and steadily attended the village school, except at brief intervals when he was engaged on his father's farm. At seventeen the passion for travel came upon him. The southeastern portion of his native State was at that time new, and although steamboats were running on the Ohio river to Pittsburgh, they were insignificant craft, and their trips were infrequent. He purchased an interest in a flatboat, and started for New Orleans. His experience in this line of business was unfortunate. In crossing the falls at Louisville the boat was wrecked, and serious loss and great inconvenience followed. His partners defrauded the youthful boatman, and, shorn of the profits of his investment, he returned finally from New Orleans, wearied and disgusted with human nature, to his native valley. After working for three years on the old homestead, in which his father gave him an interest, he entered Athens College as a student, being then twenty-one. At twenty-five he left college and went back to the farm. In the spring of 1849 he came across the plains in company with Col. J. D. Fry, the two stopping for a while at Salt Lake City. In August of that year he arrived at Sacramento, at once purchased a stock of goods, and commenced business. The floods of 1849 and 1850 swept his store out of existence, but did not ruin him entirely. In the winter of 1850 he came to San Francisco, and began buying and selling real estate, having his office in a small frame building on Montgomery street. He continued buying and selling real estate until 1864, at which time he had accumulated a fortune of $150,000.

THE KING OF THE COMSTOCK.

In 1864, the Board of Brokers was organized, Mr. Sharon became a speculator in stocks, and in six months he had lost all the property which he had spent so many years in acquiring. He asked employment of the Bank of California, and was sent to Virginia, Nevada, to adjust some outstanding claims for that institution. He afterward suggested to the bank that an agency or branch should be established there. This was done, and he was placed at its head. Unlimited powers were granted to him, and he held the position for many years to his own credit and the great profit of the parent house in San Francisco, finally leaving it at his own desire, and being succeeded by A. J. Ralston.

William Sharon is the acknowledged king of the Comstock, by reason of his many controlling interests in mines worked on that great ledge, and in the mills and railroads which are necessary adjuncts to the mines. His success as a mining stock operator is due mainly to his shrewd business tact and management. Mr. Sharon is a clever manager, quick to perceive, and as quick to act. Usually calm and unruffled in demeanor while listening to the details of a business venture, he sometimes allows his feelings to find vent in unmistakable terms. The following Comstock mines are under the control and management of Mr. Sharon: Yellow Jacket, Dayton, Imperial, Belcher, Empire Mill, Chollar, Eclipse, and Ophir. He is also largely interested in Sierra Nevada, Caledonia, and Overman, which are controlled and managed by Gen. R. P. Morrow, his bona Achates. The history of his recent acquisitions of Ophir is fresh in the minds of the readers of the Chronicle. How Baldwin thought he was the king of Ophir; how Sharon called several friends together, and they determined to wrest the control from the confident king; how Keene, the General commanding Sharon's forces, in one day purchased 12,000 shares of stock, giving Sharon the mastery, are facts which every one in California street now understands. A few days thereafter Sharon cast a loving eye toward Empire Mill, and in one day, regardless of expense, secured the control. But large as are his interests in these mines, his ownership in the Union Mill and Mining Company yields him a much larger revenue. This institution is composed of Sharon, Mills, and Ralston, and it owns a large number of mills on the Carson and elsewhere. These mills are kept constantly employed on ores from the mines owned in whole or in part by Sharon and his friends. The profits are very large, and add materially to the Sharon bank account.

HOW HE GOT HIS CROOKED RAILROAD.

Sharon's "crooked railroad," from Reno to Virginia, is a source of wealth, and its construction will illustrate his business tact and sound judgment. The mills and hoisting works in and about the Comstock consume an immense amount of wood. This was hauled by wagon to Virginia and was a large item in the running expenses of the mines. Sharon saw at a glance that the transportation of the wood would more than pay the expenses of operating the railroad. He also saw where was a large source of revenue would be derived from the carrying of ore from the mines to the mills on the Carson. He secured a subsidy of $500,000 from the people in aid of the road, constructed as much as the $500,000 would, then mortgaged the entire road for the amount necessary for its completion. In this way the road was built without costing Sharon a cent, and he still remains the owner of one-half of the road, and rates his interest at $3,500,000. According to Sutro, Mr. Sharon's revenue from the railroad approximates $12,000 per day. Mr. Sharon is largely identified with the prosperity of San Francisco, owning the Cosmopolitan Hotel and other pieces of valuable property, besides being heavily interested in the Palace Hotel and the landed properties of the New Montgomery Street Real Estate Association. He is also connected with Ralston in the building up of a new town on the Poett tract in San Mateo county.

In 1852 Mr. Sharon married Miss Maria Malloy, a native of Canada, and daughter of Capt. Malloy, of the Canadian mercantile marine. She is a lady of great refinement and culture. He has had five children, three of whom are now living—Clara, last night married; Flora, aged twelve; and Frederick, aged sixteen, who is at school at Phillips Academy, Exeter, N. H.

Eight Years' Litigation for $7.50.

From the New-Haven Palladium.

The case of Hotchkiss agt. Hoey, which has been in court for nearly eight years, has reached the Supreme Court. The smallness of the sum involved—$7.50—and the principle embodied in the suit make its appearance in the highest court of the State a subject of considerable comment. On Jan. 29, 1867, on the public highway leading from Cheshire to Waterbury, the plaintiff was driving a sleigh containing a pleasure party and drawn by six horses, when the defendant appeared before him with a one-horse sleigh—comparatively no team at all—and persisted in walking his horse. The plaintiff desired the defendant to turn out so that his pleasure party might pass, but he was impolite. For two long, dreary miles, the plaintiff alleges, the one-horse sleigh was "unnecessarily, wrongfully, and unlawfully * * * * in a slow walk immediately forward of the plaintiff's team." It was not until George Hine's house was reached that the defendant allowed the plaintiff to pass. The feelings of the plaintiff at the time can be imagined, but it is difficult to conceive of a deliberate journey to a lawyer's office, and an overhauling of the statute books.

An act concerning the driving of carriages and the management of unruly animals was found. The penalty for the violation of the statute is $7.50, half to the town in which the violation is done and half to the informer. A suit was at once brought before a Justice, and Mr. Hotchkiss got his $3.75—that is, he got a judgment for that amount. The case was then taken to the Superior Court, on an appeal, and thence to the Supreme Court by the plaintiff, because the defendant's demurrer that the declaration was insufficient was sustained. Eight years of litigation for $7.50 has cost somebody something for counsel fees, and will cost somebody more before the climax is reached.
