BROOKLYN RAPID TRANSIT.

LIVELY RIVALRY AMONG THOSE WHO WANT TO FURNISH IT.

President Bruff's Company Getting Possession of the Battlefield—The Kings County Co. Awaiting a Decision—The City's Suit.

There were about 500 men digging holes, handling concrete, and burying granite blocks yesterday along the line of the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company's routes, and the laborers who were attracted to the headquarters of the work in Lexington avenue by the promise that 1,000 men would be employed this week were told that when the iron for the superstructure arrived as many as 2,500 men would be needed. The iron work is expected this week. The honest intentions of the company had been so often questioned, and their design to sell out their road to its formidable rival, the Kings County Elevated Railroad Company, so often alleged, that President Bruff, in a minute of impatience yesterday, said that he was willing to guarantee in writing that the road would not be sold until it had been built. They had expended so much time and money on the road that they could only make it a profitable investment by building it and getting it into operation. Twenty-five hundred granite blocks have been received for the foundations. Each foundation is of concrete laid in a box, into which is put a granite block weighing between four and five tons. The blocks are four feet square at the bottom, and are pyramidal in shape. The edges at the top are beveled. Four iron bolts pass through these blocks heads downward, and the top of these bolts will fit a socket fixed in the foot of the iron column. The columns are thus bolted down to the granite. The cross girders are to be placed over the caps of these columns, and longitudinal girders over the cross girders. The trains are to run in a secure cradle along the whole route, the rails being supported by the longitudinal girders, but some distance below the top of the girders. The cars are to run between latticed iron work, the top of which will be just below the car windows. This plan, it is claimed, secures almost absolute safety, as, if the lower gear of the locomotives and cars broke, the cars would be held secure. The structure will carry a minimum dead weight of 1,500 pounds per lineal foot on each track, with trains running on both tracks at the rate of thirty miles an hour. The locomotives will weigh about fourteen tons.

The plan is to have station indicators inside of each car, to avoid the necessity of having the conductors call out the stations.

The steepest grade of the road is 110 feet to the mile in the lower part of Brooklyn, and for over two miles there is a stretch of level grade. The cars will run from Fulton Ferry to East New York in twenty-five minutes, inclusive of stops. It takes an hour and a half to travel the same distance in a horse car. The company calculate that when their road is finished to East New York they will get a passenger travel of between 35,000 and 40,000 a day. The route of the road is from Fulton Ferry along Water street, past Catharine Ferry, Plymouth street, past Bridge Street Ferry to Hudson avenue, through Park avenue, Grand avenue, Lexington avenue, Ralph avenue, Marion street, and Broadway, to East New York. There is also to be a branch from the Brooklyn terminus of the East River Bridge through York street to Hudson avenue, where it joins the main line.

The suit of the city against the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company is to be tried before Justice Barnard, in Poughkeepsie, on Thursday. If the suit of the city is decided against the company, all of the work that has been done thus far will have to be undone, and the streets be restored to their original condition.

The Highway Commissioners of New Lots have sent a notice to Mr. Bruff to appear before them, and show by what right he attempts to construct a road in East New York. William A. Wilson, foreman of the gang of workmen in East New York, was arrested yesterday on a charge of trespassing, and Justice Gertman set his examination down for to-day. One end of the framework erected to maintain the right of way in the air was set in the Jamaica plank road, and Mr. Aaron Degraw, manager of the plank road company, removed the piece of scaffolding, as an obstruction, and carried the cross bar around so that it was parallel with the street instead of across it.

The Brooklyn City Railroad Company have been stirred to action by the rapid transit agitation, and have petitioned the Common Council for permission to put steam motors on the route from Hamilton Ferry to Fort Hamilton, to experiment with a view of introducing them on other routes in the city if they prove satisfactory. The company have ordered new eight-wheeled cars, and have some new motors, with which they think they can partly solve the rapid transit problem by having steam upon the ends of their routes from Flatbush avenue to Flatbush, and from Bedford avenue to East New York.

The Kings County Elevated Railroad Company is awaiting the decision of the General Term of the Supreme Court on the Rapid Transit Commission's report, which decision, if favorable, may be taken by them in lieu of the consent of the property owners. It is freely alleged in Brooklyn that the opposition to this road is generated by some of the former Ring politicians, and that the price they asked was that the contract for the foundations should be given to a particular firm at $30 each, making an aggregate sum of about $300,000.

TEN YEARS IN THE COURTS.

The Former Slaves of a Wealthy Virginian Getting One-Fourth of his Estate.

RICHMOND, July 8.—The long contested case known as the "George case," which has been in litigation in the courts of this city since 1869, was brought to a close to-day by a compromise and a decree in the Chancery Court.

The facts in the case are briefly these: William O. George, a wealthy citizen of Richmond, died in 1869, intestate. Soon after, Lee George, a mulatto living at Philadelphia, came to Richmond and put in a claim for the property on behalf of his mother, his sister, and himself, former slaves of the deceased man, who were sent North before the war. The claim to the property was based upon an allegation that William O. George had been married to the mother in Philadelphia a short time before his death. The Richmond Georges (brother and sister, nephews and nieces of the deceased George), claiming to be heirs-at-law, contested the claim, denying the existence of any marriage. The first trial of the case resulted in a verdict for the Richmond heirs, but the decision of the lower court was reversed by the Supreme Court. In the second and third trials the jury both times failed to agree, and the fourth contest was fixed for the 4th of October next. It having been decided to compromise the case, Judge Fitchugh of the Chancery Court, to-day, after hearing the argument on the papers formerly read, expressed an opinion that, after three trials without a result, the Court could now, in its discretion, set aside the issue and proceed to decide the case without the aid of a jury. This the Court did, and thereupon, in adjudication of the question, ordered and decreed that there had been no marriage solemnized between the deceased Mr. George and Caroline George (the former slave), and that the Richmond claimants, as the lawful heirs, are entitled to the estate. But, by the consent of said heirs, it is further ordered and decreed that the Philadelphia claimants (the former slaves of the deceased George) shall receive one-fourth of the net proceeds of the sale of the property of the estate, and one-fourth of the funds in bank and in the hands of the receiver to the credit of the cause.

POSSIBLE MANSLAUGHTER.

Stabbing a Man in the Eye with a Cane—The Effect of Rum.

Ellias Lindheim keeps a saloon at 104 West Twenty-sixth street. Thomas C. C. Lenahan of 428 Sixth avenue entered the saloon early yesterday morning and ordered liquors. Lindheim refused to give it to him until it was paid for. Then they fought. Lenahan carried a light cane without a ferrule. He made a blow at Lindheim and thrust the cane into his left eye, destroying the eye and puncturing the brain. Lenahan then went away. The police were not informed of the case until 10 o'clock. Lindheim was then unconscious. He was taken to the New York Hospital, where his injuries were pronounced serious. Roundsman Donovan arrested Lenahan. He said: "I was afraid he was going to shoot me. I don't remember what the quarrel was about. We were both drunk. I have known Lindheim a year; we were in partnership together at the place. I took to drinking and left him three weeks ago of my own accord, and not through any disagreement. This thing just happened through drinking. I am sorry he is hurt."

Hannah Babcock's Accusations.

In the Yorkville Police Court, yesterday, Hannah D. Babcock made grave charges against Milton L. Carry of 20 Lexington avenue. She said he had been living with her for some time. On the 3d of July, she averred, he attacked her, choked her and tore her clothes. She quit the house to escape him. Since that time he had retained in possession of the house. At one time, she says, he compelled her to go down on her knees and swear to give perjured testimony in a horse trade suit. She also said that he has three wives, two of whom are in this city. Justice Kilbreth held Carry in $500.

Mrs. Sulevin's Missing Son.

Mrs. Sulevin, who keeps a small store at 422 Monmouth street, Jersey City, on Monday morning sent her son Martin, aged 18, to the Beehive Savings Bank with $105. As the boy did not return home, Mrs. Sulevin called at the bank, only to find that her son had not been there, and no money been left there. Mrs. Sulevin learned later that Martin was seen in company with a boy named Shay, who had run away from home many times. On leaving home Martin told some companions that he was going to Leadville.

BOARDING AT THE JAIL.

Clerk Gardner's Story of Prison Life in Ludlow Street—What Tweed Paid.

The investigation of the charges made by the Bar Association against Sheriff Bernard Reilly was continued yesterday by Referee George Ticknor Curtis.

Mr. Bush, for the Bar Association, called William L. Gardner, who from Jan. 1, 1877, until June 15 of the same year was a clerk in Ludlow street jail. He kept the records of the prison, paid the small bills, and received from the prisoners who "boarded" the money that they paid for the indulgences allowed them. The boarders had their meals served at the keeper's table, while the non-paying prisoners ate theirs in their cells. The price of board ranged from $10 to $75 a week. The witness had been paid the latter amount for Tweed's board and rooms, receiving the money every week from the friends of the prisoner.

There were two rooms on the lower floor that were called keepers' rooms. They were not intended for the use of the prisoners, but any of the latter who could afford to pay the price demanded could have them. The boarders had several other privileges which non-paying prisoners were deprived of. They were not required to retire to their cells until 10 o'clock at night, or even later, and they could use the prison yard all day, if they wished to do so. The poorer prisoners had to obtain special permission to take exercise in the yard, and they were locked up in their cells at 5 in the afternoon.

When the witness received money from the boarders he made the requisite entries in a small cash book, which he produced in court. He subsequently transferred them to the general cash book, and finally transferred them in the ledger. The board of one of the prisoners, E. A. Condit, was paid every week by the witness, whose testimony showed that a large number of the boarders paid about $30 a week, and another and probably smaller class paid from $10 to $15. The lowest amount charged was $10 a week.

With the money received from the boarders the witness paid many of the expenses of the prison. He purchased all the supplies, and paid the salaries of the employees. When a balance remained on hand he deposited it in the bank to the credit of Mr. Watson, jailer. When he had to pay bills and had not sufficient money on hand he drew up a check, which Warden Watson signed. He had more than once seen Warden Watson drunk in the prison, and he had known many instances in which prisoners were allowed to receive supplies from their friends, in addition to what they were furnished with in the jail.

Mr. Bush offered to show that prisoners taken from the jail to the courts on writs of habeas corpus were frequently forced to pay from $1 to $10 as a sort of fee for the Warden, who used the money for his own expenses. The referee ruled out the testimony as bearing on a point not embodied in the charges made against the Sheriff.

The witness, under cross-examination, said that the general character of the prisoners who went to the jail was not remarkable for cleanliness. It was his duty to be present in the corridor to receive incoming prisoners; and he was also required to be in attendance when they were discharged. The non-paying prisoners often went to him to ask permission to take exercise in the yard, and he always allowed them. The boarders did not think it necessary to go through this formality, but went into the yard whenever they saw fit. They had good sheets on their beds, while the poorer inmates had to sleep under coarse blankets.

McCarthy's Notion of being Head of a Family.

John McCarthy of Orange, N. J., became incensed at his wife, and after breaking the dishes, it is charged that he knocked her down, kicked her, threw a stone at her, and otherwise maltreated her. McCarthy was arrested. He did not wish his arrest to be reported, as he said he was "the head of the family, and found it necessary to administer correction to his wife once in a while to convince her of that fact."

Wanted—Females.
