MR. BANCROFT'S BIG WAGER.

FAILING TO PICK OUT THE CARD WITH A WOMAN'S PICTURE ON IT.

Losing $300 and a Watch in the Old Familiar Way—An Internal Revenue Collector from Georgia Missing—His Friends Solicitous.

Mr. D. C. Bancroft, an internal revenue collector in Georgia, who came North about the first of this month to visit relatives in Connecticut, is missing. The last seen of him was at about 2 o'clock P. M. on July 1, when he started from the Merchants' Hotel, in Cortlandt street, to take a Pennsylvania Railroad train for home. He had a coupon ticket good for a through passage to his destination. Yet his friends had not heard from him on the 17th, at least two weeks after the time when he should have reached his home. He is about sixty years old, five feet eight inches tall, weighs about 160 pounds, is smooth shaved, has gray hair, wore dark clothes, is slightly lame, and carried a small satchel. He reached the Merchants' Hotel on June 29, and, although he remained there only two days and a half, his conversation with various guests showed that he was suffering deeply from mortification at the loss of his watch and nearly all his money. His story was as follows:

"I left home intending to go to Connecticut and pay a visit of a few weeks to my relations there. I had with me about $300 and a gold watch and chain, a present from my wife, who is dead. I made no acquaintances until just before I reached Elizabeth, on the morning train of the Pennsylvania Railroad of June 29. I was sitting alone in a seat when a well-dressed man came from one of the forward cars and asked if the seat next to me was taken. I said it was not, and he sat down beside me. We got into conversation, and he casually exhibited considerable money, changing rolls of bills from one pocket to another. I cautioned him that it was very careless to carry money in that way, but he said he was not afraid of pickpockets. After a while he found out where I was from, and claimed to be acquainted with several prominent persons residing in my neighborhood. I believed he was from that part of the country. After a while he noticed that I was lame, although, so far as I know, he never saw me walk, and said he would get the conductor to turn over the seat in front, so I could rest my foot on it. He went forward and got the conductor's helper to come and turn over the seat. Shortly after that another man came from the forward car, and, pointing to the vacant seat, asked if it was taken, and the first man said it wasn't; so the second man sat down, and appeared to me to be a total stranger to the first man. Pretty soon we got into conversation, and we talked about sleight-of-hand and tricks. The second man said he knew a very good trick, and nobody could find it out. Then he took five pasteboards from his pocket. One side of each pasteboard was blank, and on the other was a spot, or several spots, and one had a picture of a woman on it. He showed us the sides with the figures on, and then took them up, turned them over, and threw them down before our eyes on a newspaper that he had spread out on his knees. He said we couldn't tell which one was the card with the woman on it. Now, I could see very plainly which was the card with a woman on it, because I watched it when he picked it up, and I never lost sight of it when he turned it over and threw it down. I told him I could easily tell the woman card, and the first man said he could also pick it out. At this the second man seemed to get angry, and said he would bet $10 that we couldn't pick out the card. I did not want to bet, because I have sons, and I always brought them up not to gamble. But the first man said he would bet if the second man was so anxious, and he did bet, and won $5, as I knew he would. Then he won $5 more, and winked at me as if to say, 'See what easy money I've got here.' The next time the second man caught him winking and got mad, and wouldn't bet with him any more; but he said he was willing to bet with me. Well, I finally did bet with him, and somehow I missed the card, and didn't keep track of it, and I lost several times, until I was $20 out. Then the second man asked if there was any place in the car where he could get a drink of water. The first man said, 'Yes, there is water over in that corner,' and the second man went off to get a drink, leaving the cards with us. As soon as he was out of hearing, the first man said to me: 'Look here, this man is a cheat and a rogue. He's got $20 of your money, and I can show you how to get it back. I will just turn up the corner of this woman card a little, and he will not notice it. You can pick it out easily every time and get your money back.'

"Well, by this time I had made up my mind that the second man was a cheat, and that it would be all right for me to get my money back if I knew how; so when he came back from getting his drink of water I was ready for him. He still refused to bet with the first man, because, he said, he had had bad luck with him; but he would bet with me. I said I would bet him $10. He replied that he wouldn't bet any small sum, because he was going to get his money all back or lose more. He was willing to bet any sum that I could not pick out the woman card. One thing led to another, and finally I agreed to bet all the money I had—$300—that I could pick out the woman. He was not satisfied with this, and said if I would bet my watch and chain besides, he would put up $150 more. So he bet $450 against my $300 and watch and chain. Well, I picked up the card with the corner turned that I thought was the woman card, and, good gracious me! it was the wrong card.

"Pretty soon both the men got forward, and not long afterward the conductor came and asked if they had won any money from me. I felt pretty mad and wanted to go and find the men and have them arrested. But the conductor put me back in the seat and said:

"'You sit still. They can't get off from the train. I will have them arrested for you.'

"So I sat still and waited until the train got into Jersey City, but they got away with my money and that watch and chain, and I have not seen them since. If it had not been for the conductor I should have gone after them. The day after I came to the hotel the conductor and his helper came up to see me, and promised, if I would not make the matter known to the company, they would get my watch and money back; but I told them I did not care so much for the money, but I was very anxious to get the watch and chain, because they were a present from my wife, who is dead. They said they would get the watch and chain for me, sure, if I would keep quiet."

When Mr. Bancroft quitted the hotel on July 1 he was told that he had at least two hours to catch the train; but he insisted upon going immediately, saying that he wanted to look about the railroad office for fear of the men who had robbed him. Although not intoxicated, he was slightly under the influence of liquor, which he had taken contrary to his usual habit, he said, to drown his grief. He had only two dollars in money left, which was about enough to buy food on the way home.

Pleasures on the Seashore.

A gaunt young man, with long dark hair and a look of yearning after the unknowable, was standing on Coney Island beach on Saturday, and by his side was a woman whom he addressed as "My love." He was watching the white-caps far from shore, and she seemed to be looking at the bathers.

Without removing his gaze from the wrinkled surface of the distant water, he exclaimed, "Oh, that great day when the boundless sea shall give up its secrets!"

"Yes," the woman said, with languid interest; "I wonder if that dumpy woman's hair is her own."

A look of extreme sadness came over his face like the shadow of an umbrella, and he involuntarily drew back a single step. In so doing he stepped into a hole dug by a golden-haired little fairy of four or five summers, and turned a back somersault.

"My love!" looked at him reproachfully, and said: "Leonidas, I am ashamed of you."

He muttered something about the mischievous boys that "put holes behind people for them to tumble over," and then sat down in the sand to take off his shoes and empty the ballast out of them. He had one shoe off and was dusting his instep, just then the largest wave of the afternoon came up and obliterated all the prints in the sand around his bare feet. His wife had retreated, and the appalling look that he saw in her face as the wave was receding threw a gloom over all the day thereafter.

"Leonidas," she said in a voice choked with emotion, "you had better find a seat in the shady side of the beach and keep it."

Toward sundown the pair were seen strolling on the asphalt near Cable's. The warm sun and drying wind had done much to repair the man's toilet, and "my love" was evidently regarding him more tenderly, for she was telling him that one of the pony carriages was "the Magistrate's coach, and that the urchin driver was Tom Thumb."

John Hogan's Suicide.

COLLINS STATION, Pa., July 19.—Last Sunday morning there came to this place a man who loitered about all day, acting strangely. At about midnight the inhabitants were startled by the alarm of "mad dog." Jacob Morton, who lives on the banks of the canal, looked out of his window and saw a man raging to and fro between the canal and the railroad. He asked the stranger what was the matter with the dog, and the man made a wring into the water, and fellow declared he could reach him he would kill him. On his person was an application for a license to sell liquor in some hotel. Accordingly the stranger was taken to the hotel. The man was John Hogan of New York city, and he boarded at the Tiger hotel, Kingsland, Lynn Ridge. He was about 35 years of age. In the inner part of the day he took several drinks of whisky, and had received or a large sum of money in Washington, D.C. The body was taken to Hamburg and buried.

A Dog's Remedy for a Snake Bite.

From the Dallas Herald.

MR. Hustion, who resides on Elm Fork, Texas, exhibited to us the skin of a big black rattlesnake, nearly six feet long. It had been killed and was skinned by a dog, which caught it in the brush and shook it until it was dead. The dog, said the gentleman, Mr. Hustion thought, would not be the animal, but the dog's master told us that both—the master and the dog—had been bitten by a peculiar weed, after which it would go and lie in the water. It did this for three successive days, when it was quite recovered.

Feeding a Cat With a Silver Spoon.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

A lady in this city has a pet cat which takes its meals at the table. It sits right at the table with a bib tied around its neck and is fed with a silver spoon.

WAR ON THE HUDSON.

Athens and the City of Hudson both Claiming the Right to License a Ferry.

KINGSTON, July 19.—A ferry war has been going on between the village of Athens, Greene County, and city of Hudson, Columbia County, for some time. The above places are on the opposite shores of the Hudson, and have been connected by a ferry for a number of years. The right to establish and license the ferry which plies between these places is at issue. Hudson claims the sole right to grant a ferry license, and recently granted to Capt. George H. Power of that city a license for the running of the ferry for five years. Athens, disputing the claims of Hudson, on May 19, put an opposition boat on the route, running it under the supervision of the village officials. Mr. Powers, suffering by the business of the competition, made an application before Judge Westbrook, in Supreme Court Chambers, in this city on July 5, for an injunction restraining the running of the opposition boat. The injunction was granted and the order served, but the Athens authorities continued their boat on the route. The result was that Powers procured an order directing the Athens authorities to appear on Thursday, July 10, before Judge Westbrook to show cause why they should not be punished for contempt. Louis Wolf, H. W. Howland, Herman Darnell, and R. S. Porter, the President and Trustees of the village, with the village as a corporation, were made the defendants in the case. Exhaustive argument was heard by Judge Westbrook, but he held that their action had been ill advised, and that they had indisputably been guilty of contempt in permitting the boat to continue its trips after the service of the injunction order. It was claimed by the defendants that notice of an appeal from the injunction order gave them the right to continue the running of the boat, and, in fact, constituted a stay of proceedings.

The Judge held that, on the authority of the Sixth Avenue Railroad agt. the Gilbert Elevated Railroad Company (71 N. Y., 430), the appeal did not stay the operation of the injunction order, and that the running of the boats after the appeal was a contempt. Judge Westbrook imposed a nominal fine on the defendants. "There has been," said the Judge, "a clear violation of an order of this court. I must maintain the dignity of the law, though I shall not inflict punishment that is in any wise exorbitant." The order of the Judge was that defendants pay a fine of $25 each for their misconduct; that they pay together a fine of $100 for costs and expenses incurred in the proceedings, and $75 damages sustained by the plaintiff. On Saturday last another injunction was granted by Judge Westbrook in the case, and lively times may be expected for some time to come. Bitter rivalry has existed between the Hudson and Athens people for some time. Several wealthy residents of Greene County talk of forming a company and putting a boat on the route and test the matter of right to the end.

Treed by a Bear.

PORTEN'S LAKE, Pa., July 19.—Lucy Kirkham, aged 11 years, of Brooklyn, N. Y., but spending the summer with her uncle two miles northwest of this place, had a very narrow escape from being killed by a bear on Sunday last. Miss Kirkham was driving her uncle's cows out into the woods to pasture, and as she was about to return home she heard a noise in the thicket. She stopped, and looking in the direction of the noise, her eyes beheld a large black bear coming toward her. She screamed and started to run home. Bruin gained on her, and seeing no chance for escape the terrified girl climbed a small sapling which, owing to its small circumference, the bear was unable to ascend. By quite a distance at the top of her voice, while the animal remained at the foot of the tree growling and clawing. The cries of the girl were heard by two hunters who were passing near the place where the tree was. When within shooting distance both loaded their guns, and at a given word fired. The bear fell dead. The hunters then helped the frightened girl to come down from the tree, and they accompanied her home. The bear weighed 210 pounds.

Pigeons to Fly 500 Miles.

Arrangements have been made for a pigeon flight from Columbus, Ohio, to this city. Six birds are entered. Three belong to J. Van Opstal of this city, the other three to O. W. Donner of Williamsburgh. The birds are all of the same breed—Antwerp carriers, and were in the inter-State contest, and all have been competitors in numerous flights.

The six birds were prepared for their journey on Saturday evening. Wm. J. Stimmel, 15 New Church street, and after their big basket had been properly littered, seeded, and watered they were shipped by the Adams Express, and will be released tomorrow they will be started on their journey to New York, 500 miles, by Mr. D. D. Stansell of the United States Signal Office in Columbus. It is thought that, weather and wind permitting, the first birds will arrive in thirteen hours.

A Woman Killed by a Panther.

From the Little Rock Gazette.

Near the Warren and Pine Bluff road, about fifteen miles east of Pine Bluff, a woman went out to pick blackberries. She did not return. After a long search, she was found in a briar thicket, literally torn to pieces. Almost her entire flesh was stripped from her bones. The opinion of the people is that she was killed by a panther.
