MRS. WM. GRAHAM'S SUICIDE.

SHOOTING HERSELF AT NIGHT WITH HER HUSBAND'S REVOLVER.

The Tragedy that Aroused a Sleeping Household in Rutherford Park—A Wife's Threats of Self-Destruction—Mr. Graham's Grief.

Very early on Sunday morning Dr. James H. Casey, of Hackensack avenue, Rutherford Park, N. J., was aroused by the violent ringing of his office bell. At the door was Mr. William Graham, also a resident of Rutherford Park, with his hair dishevelled, his clothes hastily donned, and his manner indicating intense excitement. Mr. Graham was unable to make himself understood at first, but finally he told the physician that his wife had shot and, he feared, killed herself. Dr. Casey went to his visitor's house, a short distance away. He found Mrs. Graham, a woman of 33 years of age, unconscious, and suffering from a bullet wound in her right temple. The ball had entered the brain, and it was deemed useless to attempt to probe for it. The patient sank rapidly, and died a few hours afterward without regaining her senses.

Mr. Graham, who is about 35 years old, is a foreman in one of the factories of the Erie Railway in Jersey City. He has lived for some years in Rutherford Park, travelling ten miles to his work every day. Eleven years ago he was married, and he has now six children, the oldest 10 years of age, and the youngest only 9 months. Since the birth of her last child Mrs. Graham has several times given indications of mental derangement. Her mind was morbid, and she frequently spoke of destroying herself. She talked disparagingly of herself, saying, among other things, that she was a bad and careless mother, when, in fact, her solicitude for her children knew no bounds.

The frequency with which she spoke of committing suicide made her husband fear to leave her alone while he was absent at his work in Jersey City, and he invited her sister, Miss Stanley, to stay in the house with her. Once Mrs. Graham entered the room where her husband was sitting with her dress soiled with sawdust, and a livid mark around her neck. Mr. Graham, remembering that the floor of the cellar was covered with sawdust, surmised what had happened and questioned her closely, but for some time she could not be induced to give any explanation. At last, partly by the appearance of the cellar and partly by his wife's replies, he discovered that she had made an attempt to hang herself, but, in some way, had fallen upon the floor.

After this a closer watch was kept upon her than before, and all dangerous weapons were removed out of her reach. Her husband had a heavy, old-fashioned Colt's revolver, with seven chambers. This he took to pieces and secreted the parts, but some time ago Rutherford Park was greatly excited about a number of daring burglaries which were perpetrated in the vicinity, and Mr. Graham had his pistol put together again, and he loaded three chambers of it. He never had occasion to fire one of them at a burglar, and at last he raised the carpet of his sleeping room and hid the weapon under it. He did not think it possible that his wife could find it there, and he left the three chambers loaded.

At this time, and previously, Mrs. Graham was very popular in Rutherford Park. She was a regular attendant of the Presbyterian church, and her quiet, unostentatious acts of charity endeared her to all who knew her. She was well educated, and was an excellent musician. Recently her husband bought her a piano, and from that time much of her leisure has been occupied in playing upon the instrument.

There were no servants in the house, and the entire family slept in the second story. Mr. Graham and his wife, with their youngest child, occupying a room at one side of the hall, while Miss Stanley, with all the other children, slept in a chamber directly opposite. Mrs. Graham had to get up frequently during the night to attend to her baby which lay in a crib near the bed, and when early on Sunday morning she arose her husband did not especially notice her absence. Suddenly the report of a pistol rang through the silent house awakening everybody; a shrill shriek from the hall followed, and a second afterwards another pistol shot was heard. Bewildered and terrified Mr. Graham and Miss Stanley sprang from bed, and opened their doors at the same instant. As they stood opposite each other another figure was between them. Mrs. Graham in her nightgown was standing in the hall, the smoking pistol in her hand, and the blood streaming from a wound in her forehead. She stood upright only for a minute, and then, before any one could hold her, she sank on her husband's feet. He, hardly knowing what he did, seized the pistol, which she must have cocked again after firing the second shot, and in his confusion and excitement he pulled the trigger, and the third ball was discharged. It penetrated the floor, where the first bullet was already buried.

Mr. Graham and Miss Stanley raised the body of the dying woman and laid it upon the bed from which she had just arisen. Then the husband ran for Dr. Casey with the result already related. Coroner Yearance of Hackensack was informed; but, after viewing the body and hearing the stories told by Mr. Graham and Miss Stanley, he said an inquest would not be necessary, and a burial permit was granted.

Mr. Graham was so shocked by his wife's death that he has been under Dr. Casey's care since. It is supposed that Mrs. Graham found the pistol under the carpet on Friday or Saturday, and secreted it until Sunday morning. The first shot, which went into the floor, could certainly not have been aimed at any part of her person, and was probably the result of an accident. In the disordered condition of her mind the report must have thrown her into an agony of terror which found vent in the shriek which she uttered before she put the pistol to her head and fired the second and fatal shot. All her other so-called attempts at suicide seem to have been rather the results of the morbid workings of a mind unduly excited by puerperal fever than deliberate efforts to destroy herself, and Miss Stanley says she never imagined that her sister would muster up sufficient courage to use a pistol.

CAROLINE CLARE.

The Canadian Girl who Throws Off as Sharp Shocks as the South American Eel.

From the London (Ont.) Advertiser.

About two years since a daughter of Mr. Richard Clare, Caroline by name, and then 17 years of age, living on lot No. 25, on the second concession of Rodney, was taken ill. Her disease could not be correctly diagnosed, but had many peculiar features. Her appetite fell off, and she lost flesh till from a strapping girl of 130 pounds weight she barely weighed 87 pounds. There did not seem to be any organic complaint. The bodily functions were not impaired, and although she ate less than formerly, the falling off in this respect was not such as in itself would alarm her friends. After the lapse of a few months she took to her bed. Then it was that a change occurred in her mental condition. Formerly she was noted rather for lack of conversational powers, but now fits or spasms would come over her, on the passing away of which her eyes would become set and glazed, her body almost rigid, and while in that state she would discourse eloquently, and give vivid descriptions of far-off scenes, far exceeding in their beauty anything which she had ever seen or presumably even read of. On the passing away of this state she exhibited a great degree of lassitude and indisposition to move, and was taciturn and surly in reply to any questions. This continued till about a month since, when an extraordinary change took place. The girl, although still not gaining flesh, appeared to rally. She became light-hearted and gay, and her friends began to anticipate an early release for her from the room to which she had been confined so long. Their expectations were not in vain, for she is now about the house, apparently as well bodily as ever. But another remarkable development has taken place. She is constantly giving off electrical charges, and seems to be a perfect battery. A person, unless possessed of the very strongest nerves, cannot shake hands with her, nor can any one place his hand in a pail of water with hers. By joining hands she can send a sharp shock through 15 or 20 persons in a room, and she possesses all the attraction of a magnet. If she attempts to pick up a knife the blade will jump into her hand, and a paper of needles will hang suspended from one of her fingers. So strongly developed is the electrical power, that she cannot release from her touch any articles of steel which she may have taken up. The only method yet found is for a second party to take hold of the articles and pull, while the girl strokes her own arm vigorously from the wrist upward. On her entering a room a perceptible influence seizes hold of all others, and while some are affected to sleepiness, others are ill and fidgety till they leave, and even for an considerable time afterward. A sleeping baby will wake up with a start at her approach, but with a stroke of her hand she can at once coax it to slumber again. Animals are also subject to her influence, and a dog of the bloodhound species for hours at her feet as motionless as in death. A curious part of the phenomena is the fact that the electricity can be imparted to her by any article with which she habitually comes in contact. The other day a young friend, while doing the housework, took up a pair of corsets belonging to Caroline, and on her hand touching the steel she was compelled to drop them with a loud cry and an exclamation to the effect that she had run a needle into her finger. Wooden spoons have had to be made for her, as she cannot touch metal. Altogether the case is a most remarkable one, and attracts scores of visitors to the house of Mr. Clare. Medical men are especially interesting themselves, and it has been stated that Dr. Tye of Thamesville will read a paper on the subject at the meeting of the Provincial Medical Association which is to be held in London in the course of this summer. Mr. Clare is the father of a family of seven children, none of whom except Caroline show any abnormal qualities.

FREE BATH AT THE BATTERY.

The Seventh of the City's Bathing Houses Thrown Open Yesterday.

The seventh free bath was opened yesterday. It is at the Battery, and is bound by new cables to rings set in the stone face of the Battery sea wall midway between the South Ferry and Castle Garden. In the new bath the platform outside of the dressing rooms is nearly double the width of any of those in the old baths, being fully eight feet wide. Yesterday was the women and girls' day. Mrs. Fernandez, who has been for years attached to the Thirty-fifth street bath, assumed charge as Superintendent at 5 o'clock in the morning. But there were earlier comers than herself. Working girls who longed for an invigorating plunge before the toil of the day was begun were seated on the benches near the end of the gangway leading to the bath, awaiting her. The water was cold, and the morning air had a full sweep, but the girls lost no time in preparing for the plunge. Most of them had a cast off thin dress with them for a bathing suit, but to those who had not Mrs. Fernandez lent bathing suits for ten cents each. After 9 o'clock little girls enjoying the freedom of vacation from the public schools, and women having completed the morning work in the household, superseded the working girls. The women were fewer in number as noon approached, but the little girls became more numerous.

The water in the new bath is as clear as crystal. Yesterday morning Mrs. Fernandez found girls who lived as far up town as Sixty-first street. They said that they would have to pay five cents, any way, to ride down to their places of employment, usually in the lower part of the city, below Canal street, and they came to the conclusion that they might as well start early enough from home to get a bath and enjoy the breeze on the Battery before they went to work. The days for women and girls at the new bath are to be Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays. Women will be encouraged to come before 9 A. M. and after 6 P. M., when the number of girls is least. The days for men and boys are to be Tuesdays, Thursdays, and Saturdays.

ALDERMAN SAUER'S CHARGES.

The Committee to Report To-day—The Rapid Transit Schemes up Again.

The Committee of Aldermen who investigated the charges of corruption made by Alderman Sauer against Alderman Haughton will report to the Board of Aldermen to-day. The report will contain the testimony taken by the Committee and Alderman Sauer's retraction. But it is doubtful whether any conclusion will be given, the Committee being understood to disagree as to what was proved. One of the Committee suggested that the report should contain the opinion that no corrupt means was used to secure the rejection of the rapid transit report by the Aldermen. Col. Roberts, the Committee's Chairman, replied that his opinion might not receive the willing assent of his colleague, and the committeeman thereupon withdrew his suggestion.

The Aldermen expect to receive to-day the Rapid Transit Commissioners' second report, containing the plans for the railroads to be built on the routes which the Aldermen have refused to confirm, and the rates of fare to be charged by the companies which are to be formed to construct and operate those railroads. It is believed that this report will meet with the fate which befell the first report, although some of the City Fathers favor its reference to the Committee on Streets. Alderman Roberts will offer a resolution to discharge the Aldermen Morris says that he shall make a similar motion. The report will probably be rejected.

OIL CLIMBING MOUNTAINS.

Hundreds of Barrels Lost—Jets of Oil Flying Twenty Feet High.

From the Clinton Democrat.

John Ward, one of the watchmen on duty during the filling of the new oil pipe line, gives the following account of what he saw: The line crosses Hiner's run, or its head waters, at a place called McClure's Springs. Here there is a hollow or depression in the ground. From this place to the residence of Mr. Holding, some six miles beyond, there is a great rise; this the oil had to climb after passing the hollow at the spring. I was told to watch well this hollow, as the oil had ascended the Kettle Creek Mountain and was coming. I repaired to the hollow and lay down beside a huge tree, when I heard a sound like a heavy wind, and presently heard the oil gurgling past. I waited some time. There was no leakage, and all seemed perfect. I left my position and passed along to see if it was all fastened shed. I had gone about two miles when I received a despatch to watch well the hollow, and not to leave it for some time; so I hastened back. Imagine my astonishment when I saw the place full! It had left a short time before now hissing at ten thousand points. Jets of oil were flying twenty feet high, and hundreds of barrels flowing down Hiner's Run, never to see market.

I thought the pipe was destroyed. At first I was afraid to approach it, but soon grew bolder, and set to work to stop the leak. I made poor headway. It was a dark night and I dared have no light. I had taken off my coat, the whizzing oil carried away my hat, and I very soon became thoroughly drenched with oil. My pockets and my hair and eyes were full. I at length grew sick, and supposed I would have to give up, and that all would be lost, when all at once the whizzing stopped, and, instead of an out-pressure, I could hear an in-drawing—a suction of air. I now realized the fact that the oil had all this time been climbing the up grade to Mr. Holding's, but was now on the descent for Pine Bottom Run. This caused a suction, and relieved the hollow at the springs.

I again waited some time, when I received a despatch to hasten to Haneyville, as the pipe was bursting. I got a horse and went with all speed. When I arrived the people there were greatly excited. The pipe was throbbing and whizzing at every pore. The oil was spouting from the pipe for miles. I made no attempt to calk. I knew from my experience at McClure's Springs that the oil had reached and was climbing the high mountain before Pine Creek, but the pressure must be so great that I feared every moment the pipes would burst.

Here was a force against which human power was of no avail, hence we only stood and looked on, when suddenly, as quick as thought, all commotion ceased, except a sucking in of air, and I heard the oil pass rapidly along the pipe, and knew it had crossed over the mountain and was speeding on its way to Williamsport, with no more mountains to climb.

How an Old Rat Died.

From the Hartford Times.

A keen-eyed and gray-bearded rat in a Rockville woolen mill had for a long time evaded every device to entrap him, but an expert took the case in hand, and succeeded at last in breaking him into the trap. When the spring announced that the "old General" was caught, the boys crowded around and peered curiously at the bright eyes and nervous movements of the old fellow, who was streaking it inside. It was decided to put him in the "extractor," and if he survived that treatment to let him out. The "extractor" in a woolen mill is a machine used to extract the moisture out of the cloth, the process being effected by putting the cloth into a basket that revolves swiftly inside a heavy frame-work of iron. So the trap was fixed into the basket, and the lift run on.

Round and round went the basket, lurching heavily from side to side, but gradually growing steadier as the revolutions became swifter. Steadily the speed went on to 100, 200, 300, and 400 times a minute. The eyes could see a dark spot in the basket, then there was a sudden jar, and a cry was heard that the run would fly out. On a sudden the speed began to slack, shaking off the frame, and the machine stopped. Was "gray-beard" dead? Not a bit. He was streaking it here and at the trap, his eyes bright as ever. Once more he took his place in the basket. It was to be a ride to the death this time—a fast train that would whirl him around at the rate of a mile and a quarter a minute, or 1,920 seconds. The "old General" seemed to have an impression that affairs were nearing a climax, for a piercing squeal was heard as the basket again started up. For one minute, two minutes, three minutes, and the basket was whirling around fully seven hundred times to the minute! A steady hum, instead of the sharp cracks indicated before, high speed. The belt was thrown off and the brake applied. When the machine stopped the "old General" was no more.

The Sickness at the Highlands.

Mr. Cohn, the Third avenue baker, says of the cake which was supposed to have caused the sickness at the Highlands, as reported in Sunday's Sun, that he could not tell positively whether the cake delivered was a jelly or a cream cake. Many orders are received daily, and it is possible that instead of a cream a jelly cake was delivered, as the difference could not be ascertained by merely looking at it. Now, said Mr. Cohn, if it was only cake, the entire affair is a mystery to me, as this stuff will keep for several days, and the very best of ingredients are used. If a cream cake, then it is quite likely that the cream had turned sour and made the people sick. I always warn people when they order cream cake never to keep it more than twenty-four hours, as I know it will not keep in this hot weather. Yet all acknowledged when they ate the cake that it tasted good and the symptoms of disease did not develop themselves until several hours afterwards.

Mr. Cohn said that it had cost a cream had been used the utensils must have been at once apparent, and the cake could not have been eaten at all. He said that the filling contained nothing but sugar and water, and that all the ingredients are used by all the people, and he believed that a complete investigation would show that the sickness must be attributed to some other cause. Mr. Cohn added that Mr. Ivins, the gentleman for whom the cake was bought, has been his customer for five years.

Horses Imported and Exported.

In Robert Stoddart's stables at 600 Greenwich street are eight Norman French stallions that arrived in the steamship California on Saturday last. They were bought in France by E. Dillon & Co.'s stock farms, Bloomingdale, Ill., for the same stables, and a number of fine blooded horses bought in Canada and to be shipped to England. Mr. Stoddart says that the demand in Europe for American horses is very considerable. The country is filled with agents from England principally, who scour the country for fine trotters. Last week Mr. Stoddart shipped eighty horses for England.

Drowned in Boston Harbor.

BOSTON, July 21.—Among those who sailed from City Point on Wednesday afternoon, when no sign was given of the terrible gale, was a party of three gentlemen, who chartered the yacht Cape Cod for a sail down the harbor. The party consisted of Mr. Miller, proprietor of a saloon under the Boston Hotel; Mr. Ferrell, a Western journalist, on a visit East, who had charge of the boat, and Mr. George Martin of South Boston. Nothing has been heard from them, and their friends have given up all hope of their safety.

Financial.

OFFICE OF THE NEW YORK, LAKE ERIE AND WESTERN RAILROAD COMPANY, NEW YORK, June 30, 1879.

This company has made an arrangement with Messrs. DREXEL, MORGAN & CO. to extend the second mortgage bonds issued by the New York, Lake Erie and Western Company, maturing Sept. 1 next, the principal payable in forty years from that date, and the interest March 1 and Sept. 1 semi-annually, at the rate of five per cent, payable both in United States gold of the present standard, without deduction for taxes.

The right to extend, as above, has been reserved to such of the present holders as may desire to avail of it, and the proceeds of the bonds so issued will be used for that purpose by Messrs. DREXEL, MORGAN & CO. prior to the 15th of August next.

Such bonds, as may not be extended by the holder, or be presented for that purpose by Messrs. DREXEL, MORGAN & CO., will be paid at maturity.

WALL ST., NEW YORK, June 30, 1879.

Referring to the above notice of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad Company, we hereby agree to receive any of the New York and Erie Railroad second mortgage bonds for extension.

Such bonds, maturing on the 1st day of July, at 100% and accrued interest, any of the bonds, the holders of which may desire to sell rather than extend. DREXEL, MORGAN & CO.
