EAST SIDERS FRIGHTENED.

COMBINING AGAINST THE SMALL-POX RECEPTION HOSPITAL.

Their Legal Representative Said to Have Been Given an Appointment Under the Board of Health—His View of It All.

A member of the Eighteenth Ward Taxpayers' Association said on Thursday that he understood that the Board of Health had taken a step toward shelving Mr. Frank H. Rodenburg, counsel to the association and other property holders of the Eighteenth Ward in the fight against establishing the Small-Pox Reception Hospital at the foot of East Sixteenth street, by appointing him an inspector of tenements.

"I have heard of this inspectorship," Mr. Rodenburg said, "often, too often, I will frankly—"

"Halloo, Mr. Inspector!" a burly friend shouted as he neared Mr. Rodenburg.

"There it is, you see," Mr. Rodenburg exclaimed. "I heard nothing but 'Mr. Inspector' all day yesterday, and I was kept busy making explanations."

Mr. Rodenburg's friend winked his off eye.

"I read in a morning newspaper the other day," Mr. Rodenburg said to the reporter, "what my friends seem to have supposed, and what may have been an announcement of my appointment as an inspector of tenements. But I have had no intimation of such an appointment from the Board of Health. If the appointment has been conferred upon me, without my consent, I must respectfully decline the honor. The office is honorable and useful, if properly filled, no doubt, but the pay is very small. If the appointment has been given as a peace-offering, it must have been intended for my office boy. My opinion of this appointment, if it has been made, is that it is a practical joke on the part of some of my political friends. But it is a very embarrassing joke for me just now. The taxpayers of the Eighteenth Ward have intrusted me with the responsibility of conducting the legal fight against the grossest outrage that was ever attempted against the apparently poor and friendless in this city, and they may be disquieted by even the report that I have been offered an appointment by the Board of Health. They retained me, and instructed me to apply for a perpetual injunction against the establishment of the hospital by the Board of Health. I have fully appreciated the necessity for despatch, for I am informed that the Board of Health has already begun to use the unfinished building for the reception of small-pox patients, and that a coffin containing the remains of a person who died of small-pox was allowed to remain under the scorching sun near the hospital until an indignant property holder informed the police. I have lost no time in preparing the papers in support of the application, but they are necessarily long. They are in the copyist's hands, and may be ready to serve upon the Board of Health to-morrow morning. I have been much embarrassed in obtaining affidavits from physicians by the absolute fear of the Board of Health that seems to be widespread among them. Well-known physicians have told me that they were in hearty sympathy with our side of the fight, but when I suggested that they should give a helping affidavit their sympathy vanished. They said that they could not afford to be antagonistic to the Board of Health. But I have secured, I believe, all the affidavits necessary to the strength of the application, and I have an earnest hope that it will be promptly granted. It is to be made in Supreme Court, Chambers, on the 4th of August, by a distinguished lawyer. The point must be argued by Corporation Attorney Whitney's opinion, given in writing to the Aldermen, as to the establishment of the hospital within the square bounded by Sixteenth and Seventeenth streets and Avenue C and the East River—that it will not vitiate the city's title—will not be raised in our application for a perpetual injunction. It was suggested to me, but I determined not to avail myself of it. But I will say that I entertain some doubt as to the correctness of Mr. Whitney's opinion. My impression is that the square was deeded by the Loper estate, which then included nearly all the surrounding property, to the city, upon the condition that it should be devoted to market purposes. The intent of the estate was evidently to increase the value of the surrounding property. If the city devotes a part of the square to a pest-house, an institution that must damage the surrounding property almost beyond calculation, may it not destroy its title to the square?"

JUSTICE BARNARD'S DECISION.

The Two Suits against the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company Ended.

Justice Barnard of the Supreme Court yesterday determined all of the pending litigation involving the right of the Brooklyn Elevated Railroad Company to build its road in Brooklyn in favor of the company. There were two suits against the company—one instituted by the city of Brooklyn to restrain the company from tearing up the streets, and the other by Benjamin Bryer, a property owner in Lexington avenue, who sought to restrain the company from building the road in front of his house. Justice Barnard decides that the principal points presented have already been determined by the Court of Appeals, in the Elevated Railroad cases in this city, and his conclusion is that the law of 1875, amending the charter of the company by adding another list of corporations, and making certain changes in the mode of constructing the railroad, was such an amendment as was held to be legal by the Court of Appeals, and did not make the grant a new one, so as to conflict with the constitutional amendment of 1875 in reference to street railroads.

As to the case of Bryer, whose complaint rested on his being an owner of the fee to the middle of the street in front of his lots, the Justice decides, as the case now stands, that Bryer is not such owner. The lots do not by measurement include the street, but go only to the side of the street, and therefore Bryer is only an abutter on the street, and as such has no standing to prevent by injunction the building of the road before his damages are paid. The motion for a new argument on the part of the city and for an injunction on the part of Bryer are denied.

It is understood that the city will not pursue the litigation any further. The company has a limited number of men at work, but the officers promise to be ready for carrying passengers by Dec. 1.

The surveyors of the Kings County Elevated Railroad went along Fulton street, Brooklyn, yesterday, locating the sites for the foundations of the pillars. The litigation involving this road has been carried to the Court of Appeal.

Ludlow Street Jail.

In the investigation of the charges against Sheriff Reilly, yesterday, Deputy Warden Fitzsimmons of Ludlow street jail, under cross-examination, said that he never knew of a prisoner being treated roughly in the prison, except an Italian who, at 2 o'clock in the morning, drew a knife upon one of the keepers, and had to be disarmed and manhandled. The witness said ex-Warden Wilson drunk for three or four times, and burned on learning the facts, at once discharged the Warden for intemperance. The food for the prisoners was exceptionally good, and the rooms and beds were all that could be desired; yet the witness admitted that the coffee and tea given to the line-driving prisoners in the upper stories was not of the same quality as that furnished to the Warden and his family. He admitted it was true, the witness continued, that prior to March, 1878, the poorer prisoners in Ludlow street jail were not furnished with towels, and that when they were supplied of the last, he ordered that towels should be supplied to all, whether they could pay board or not.

OPELIKA'S TRAGEDY.

The Father of a Betrothed Girl Shot and Killed by her Faithless Suitor.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

In Opelika, Ala., on Monday evening, Samuel G. Grasty shot J. J. Read in the abdomen, and on the next day Mr. Read died. Mr. Grasty has been for some time a railroad soliciting agent in this city, and latterly travelling agent of J. M. Lewis & Co. of New Orleans. He is a large, handsome man, typically Southern in looks and manner, and remarkable for fine education and large experience in travels abroad and at home. He has many friends in the city to whom he was always a most genial and acceptable companion. He was a gallant soldier in the Confederate army, and subsequently travelled in Europe and North America. Of late he has been absent a great deal from the city. The other two parties were Mr. J. J. Read and his son Samuel, formerly of this city and more latterly of La Grange, where they kept the Read House. They are now residents of Opelika. They are well connected here in the city.

Mr. Grasty was boarding in the Sledge House. He was in his room up stairs on Monday evening, and the elder Read stepped up to the portico of the hotel, where he was soon joined by his son Sam. After a moment's conference they ascended to Grasty's room. What occurred there is not known, but a noise as of scuffling was heard, and then three rapid pistol shots rang through the halls.

A rush was made for the room of Grasty, and the three men were found in the small apartment, surrounded with the evidences of a sharp and fearful struggle. Mr. Grasty stood there bleeding from the head and hands, and holding the yet smoking revolver in his hand, his eyes flashing wrathfully upon his adversaries. The old man Read lay bleeding and groaning from a terrible pistol shot in the abdomen and one in the eye. His son, Sam, was holding his reeking hands to his right jaw, just under which a pistol ball had entered, and to the left cheek, where it had made its exit. He was coughing and spitting the blood from his wound, and unable to speak. Mr. Grasty was found to have been severely cut across the front of the head, the right arm, and fingers of the left hand.

From the Courier Journal.

Report says that Read went to Grasty and bade him cease visiting his house; that Grasty replied that he would quit visiting his house if he desired it, and took hold of Read's whiskers, pulled them in an insulting way, and struck Read in the face; that Read struck him on the head with a stick, knocking him down; that at this juncture Sam Read entered the room with a knife or a dirk in hand, and cut Grasty in the wrist; and that Grasty reached over for an old pistol on the bureau, and shot Read through the abdomen and Sam through the neck and face. There are rumors that the cause of the difficulty is the relations of Grasty and Miss Read.

From the Herald.

ATLANTA, Ga., July 24.—Grasty says that his lawyers will not permit him to talk. Mr. Read's dying deposition is that he went to have a friendly talk with Grasty on a very serious family matter, and that he (Grasty) could not agree as to what was right, and he told Grasty he had better discontinue his visits. Grasty said, on his oath, "I will not stop," firing into a rage. Read then said, "You shall stop, sir." Grasty struck him over the eyes. He struck Grasty with a stick. Grasty then took up a large Colt revolver, and, putting it to his head, shot him down. Mr. Read would not say what the family matter was, but he did say that he had satisfactory reasons for ordering Grasty to quit visiting his house.

Sam Read was shot through the lower jaw upward, his tongue being cut in two. He was able to talk for the first time this morning. He says the shooting was the culmination of a tragedy that had been deepening for years, and that unless Grasty had disappeared certain thing he would have died before letting him see his sister again. He says that he and his father determined to go and try to get Grasty to do a certain thing. He waited outside till he heard some one knocked down. He rushed in to find his father fallen and Grasty over him. He pushed Grasty off. As he did so Grasty shot him in the face. Having no knife or pistol, he ran out of the room.

It is said that Grasty had become so intimate with Miss Read that it was necessary for her honor that he should marry her. It is averred that he gave her reason to believe several times that he would do so, and that the hope of his marrying her without a collision and exposure kept the Reads quiet. It is added that Sunday night was fixed for the marriage. On Saturday he was with Miss Read in her house, but on Sunday night did not go to the house. On Monday night the shooting was done. It is said that the intimacy between Grasty and Miss Read was begun in Atlanta two or three years ago, and that the girl's mother died of grief. The case has been talked of for two years. No authoritative denial of any of the above allegations has come out as yet. Mr. Grasty declining to speak. The young lady is wild with grief. She is passionately devoted to Grasty, and has been completely under his control. Her condition is very critical. Sam Read is very low. It is feared that mortification will set in in his wound.

As to the fight itself, Grasty says that he was knocked down, and that the assault was continued, and he fired from the floor, disabling both his assailants. The committing trial is postponed because of Sam Read's condition.

Grasty has the strongest legal talent, and Read only one lawyer. A younger brother and five girls are all that are left of this ill-fated family. The girls are remarkable for their beauty. The feeling is strong against Grasty.

New York's Asylums for the Insane.

In answer to the trustees of the Hudson River Asylum for the Insane, Attorney General Schoonmaker says that the provisions of chapter 272 of the laws of 1879 are constitutional, and that under them no person is entitled to admission into the State's asylums unless he has been a resident of the State for at least a year, but that his residence may be determined as it is determined politically. A citizen of New York may be out of the State for a year without intending to change his place of residence, and his rights as a citizen are those of a man who has dwelt in the state continuously.
