CAUGHT BY A BLOODHOUND.

ONE OF THE MURDERERS OF AN AGED COUPLE HUNTED DOWN.

A Long Chase through Fields and Woods—The Dog Trails the Fugitive to a Straw Stack—The Negro Tells the Story of the Crime.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

Yesterday evening, as the streets were growing dark, a knot of police officers passed through the city in the direction of the jail, having securely guarded in their midst a burly, brutish negro, who stalked along not without some show of pain and weariness. The procession moved rapidly and quietly. The fact that Capt. Bill Starnes appeared to lead the party, and that "Lee," Capt. Kries's bloodhound, followed close in the rear, indicated the facts.

"Is that the d——— who killed old man Defoor?"

The question was repeated a hundred times from men who guessed rightly the nature of the quarry the officers had taken.

"It is one of them," replied Capt. Starnes, with a smile, mending his pace to escape further inquiries.

The prisoner was soon inside of the barred doors of Fulton County Jail. He is a medium-sized, ginger-cake looking darkey, of wonderfully perfect muscular development, and with a face that might make a fitting portrait for the walls of hell itself. He was so fatigued and weak that he had to lie down almost as soon as he reached the jail. He had been through a long and rough chase through fields and woods, and had had a fearful double combat with a bloodhound and with that tough citizen, Capt. Starnes. He was bitten in the neck and arms severely by the hound, and had the roof of his head badly jostled by a spade in the hands of Capt. Starnes.

Ever since the hour the news of the terrible murder of old Martin Defoor and his aged wife reached the city on Saturday morning the police have been hard at work. Aaron Burks, an old freedman living in the Adamsville district, on the Wilson place, came into town and hunted up Capt. Starnes, whom he knew and for whom he had worked. He told Capt. Starnes the following facts:

On Sunday afternoon a negro man had come to Burks's house and asked for lodging, and also proposed to hire out to Burks. He said that he was from Butts County, and that he was trying to keep away from the railroad and out of the sight of any white men. He aroused the suspicions of Aaron, who asked him many questions. The negro told him that he had knocked his brother-in-law in the head in Butts County, and had run away on account of it. He asked Burks:

"Have you heard of them people getting killed up here?"

Burks said he had not—which was not the exact state of his knowledge of the matter.

"Yes," said the fellow, "two old white people were killed up here by the river yesterday morning. Somebody chopped their heads off."

Burks gave no intimation of any previous knowledge of the affair, and from the talk of the negro was soon satisfied that he was concerned in the crime. Burks says the negro had money, and told him that he had "plenty."

Yesterday morning Burks told another negro, Doc Davis, to keep the strange negro there until Burks could come to town. He did come to town.

Capt. Starnes, George Kries, Officers Goodson and J. M. Wright at once took horse to capture the suspected negro. They went with Burks to his house, but the negro had gone. It was suggested by Burks that he had gone to Davis's house, and thither the four officers went at once, eager to give chase, and certain that old "Lee," the best bloodhound in the South, would never lose the trail when once he got upon it, but when the party reached Davis's house the bird had flown. Doc Davis attempted to throw the pursuers off the track. They knew by his conversation that he was trying to mislead them, and the knowledge served to make them redouble their efforts to strike the trail. Kries and Wright remained at the immediate neighborhood, circling the premises, while Starnes and Goodson went around to the Sandtown road. About this time the dog, a magnificent bloodhound belonging to Mr. George Kries, struck the scent. Starnes and Goodson at once hailed to Kries, and Starnes said that he thought he caught a glimpse of a man going in the direction of Utoy Creek. The dog was now warming upon the trail, and when he reached the point at which Starnes had discovered the fugitive he stopped with full cry and ran down the creek the distance of three miles, the men following in not pursuit, sometimes mounted, sometimes on foot, the ground being very uneven and in many places swampy.

Having run for three miles down Utoy Creek in this way, the dog suddenly changed his course and ran in the direction of Mr. John Lee's, who lives about nine miles from Atlanta, between the Sandtown and Green Ferry roads. For several or eight miles the dog followed the new heat, the men being compelled to use their utmost speed to keep the animal in sight, until it arrived within about 100 yards of Mr. Lee's house, when it began to run in circles around a large pile of straw just outside a gin-house. Mr. Kries being satisfied that the negro was in the straw, took the dog into the house. The dog ran at once to a small opening in the straw, and gave every indication that the game was there. Kries put his leg down into the straw but did not touch the negro. Goodson put his hand down and seized the negro by the nose. Starnes and Wright were on the outside watching. The negro called out to them, saying: "You's got the wrong man. I'm not the man." They pulled him out. The dog instead of his teeth sunk upon his neck. The negro fought furiously. A terrible scuffle ensued. Capt. Starnes knocked him down twice with a spade, and they finally conquered him. Young Lee came on and assisted them in taking the negro. Indeed, everybody on the place turned out and took great interest in the chase as soon as the dog came in sight.

After they had secured the negro, he asked what they wanted him for. They replied that he had been selling watermelons. He said he was not the man who stole the watermelons; it was John Morgan. Mr. Kries then asked him where he was on Friday night last. He said he was in Griffin. Mr. Kries next asked him if he had ever been across the Chattahoochee. He said he never had, but had crossed the Tombigee. Mr. Kries then asked him where he came from. He said from Alabama, but that he was born in Georgia. He again said, "I'm the wrong man; I never did anything wrong." Kries asked him if he did not cross the river road on Saturday evening last. He answered that he did not. Mr. Kries inquired whether he heard the dog about that time. He replied that he did not; that the dog was after the white man. Mr. Kries next asked him where the white man was. He replied that he did not know. The four captors were careful not to make mention of the murder.

After the above conversation, they started with the prisoner to the city. They talked with him incessantly, and he continued to let slip expressions pointing to his guilt, until they were within five miles of Atlanta, when they met some one in the road who asked them if that was the man who had killed the old people. Then it was that the negro said, "I did not kill the people." Mr. Kries now said, "Don't tell us any more lies—tell us the truth about it." The negro confessed that he held the light. He said that he and a white man and another negro went to Defoor's on the day before the murder. He and the other negro secreted themselves behind the garden fence at the back of the house, while the white man entered the house; that this was on Friday, at 6 o'clock in the evening. The white man remained in the house until late at night, when the old people had fallen into a deep sleep. Then he stole down stairs, opened the back door and whistled; and the prisoner and the black mate joined the white man in the yard, and there they plotted the murder. The three went together to the blacksmith shop, and having lighted the lamp brought from the house, the white man entered and secured the sledge-hammer. They then went back to the house. They decided not to use the sledgehammer. The white man told the prisoner to go and get that axe. He refused. The white man and the other negro cursed him. He then went across the road and got the axe. The three entered the house. The white man took the axe and murdered the old people while the prisoner held the light. The other negro watched at the back door. After the killing the prisoner placed the lamp on the bed where it was found, but not with a purpose to burn the house. They got "lots of money," but they "threwed him off." The white man promised to divide, but didn't do it. He (the prisoner) was searching the bureau drawer. The white man whispered to him to get away; he was too slow. He took the boots, carried them to the woods behind the house and tried them on, but they were too small, and he left them where they were found. The white man and the other negro went off somewhere in the city.

The negro now in jail gives his name as Asa Morgan. He came from Alabama, although born in Georgia. He was recognized last evening by a negro who had known him as a drayman in Mobile.

When caught, Capt. Starnes took from Asa's pocket a short piece of corn-cob, tied around with a string, and covered with dried blood.

From the Atlanta Constitution.

GRIFFIN, Ga., July 29.—A negro, supposed to be one of the Defoor murderers, and giving his name as Charlie Smith, was arrested on the arrival of the down passenger train, this afternoon. Conductor Renan telegraphed from Hampton to the Chief of Police, saying he thought he had one of the murderers on his train. Marshal Manley met him and made the arrest without any trouble. Smith was greatly excited, but makes no confession. He says he knew old man Defoor, and knew that he kept the ferry. He got on the train at Jonesboro, and says he walked from Atlanta last night. He says he saw a man come into Atlanta with a rope around his neck, in charge of officers, referring, of course, to Asa Morgan.

Fall River Strikers Held for Trial.

FALL RIVER, Aug. 1.—In the District Court this morning Michael Hurley and Bartholomew Shea were each adjudged probably guilty of intimidating Stephen Lee, a spinner at the Durfee mills, on July 25. The prisoners were bound over to the Superior Court in $500 each. The assailant of Horace S. Audrew, a spinner at the Westamoe mill, on Wednesday night last, was arrested this morning. His name is Mark Dyer, a striker spinner from the Border City mills.

A NOVEL STEAMBOAT.

Something Like a Catamaran, and Expected to Beat Anything Afloat.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Aug. 1.—Persons driving to the ferry landing at this city, or taking a tour of inspection along the river front, have been mystified at a curious structure on which many workmen are planing and hammering. To the uninitiated it seems like a misshapen boat with a hole through the middle, and even to those acquainted with catamarans and other curiosities of river architecture, the vessel seems an anomaly. It is, in fact, a steam catamaran, built for the purpose of obtaining a greater amount of speed in proportion to the outlay of power than has yet been reached by any vessel that floats. The model is entirely different from anything ever before designed, and is the result of the theories of Mr. William T. Merritt, the owner, and the practical experience of George T. Polk, the builder. In some respects it is similar to an ordinary catamaran. It has an ordinary hull split in two, the halves placed about fifteen feet apart, and the boarded, perpendicular sides are exactly parallel to each other. These two half hulls are joined above by heavy beams; width of deck thirty feet, length seventy. The water, of course, flows through the straight, middle space a few feet below the deck. Such vessels are usually very long and narrow, and have heretofore been used only for sailing. In England, recently, two ordinary hulls were thus joined together by a deck, and used with four wheels for crossing the channel, the object being to prevent seasickness; but this vessel was not a catamaran, the sides of the interior space not being straight and parallel, but rounding, and so offering as much resistance as two ordinary hulls.

The hulls of Mr. Merritt's catamaran will be 51 feet on the keel, with only seven feet beam and five feet depth, so that while the deck is almost half as wide as it is long, the hulls are very long and narrow, and will displace but little water, and offer no more resistance than a single narrow hull. In each hull will be placed a 25-horse power engine, operating two wheels, so that the vessel will have four wheels, two between and two outside the hulls. The wheels themselves are of peculiar construction, eight feet in diameter, and of the kind known as "feathering"—that is, the paddles are movable, and by a simple latching and unlatching process are constantly at right angles to the water, plunging into it and coming out vertically. Thus all the power is directly applied to forward propulsion, and none whatever is wasted in lifting or depressing the vessel.

The vessel will be launched in a day or two. It is expected that she will make thirty miles an hour. At all events an unprecedented speed will undoubtedly be attained. As soon as she is launched she will be towed to Newburgh, to Ward, Stanton & Co.'s dock, where her engines will be put in.

UNDER THE SHADOW OF THE GALLOWS.

Hilaire Latrimouille Praying for a Writ of Error and Stay of Proceedings.

ALBANY, Aug. 1.—Judge Westbrook held a special term this forenoon for the purpose of signing the bill of exceptions and hearing the motion for a writ of error and stay of proceedings in the case of Hilaire Latrimouille, now under sentence of death in the Albany jail. J. R. Stevens, of counsel for the condemned man, desired inserted in the bill an exception to an alleged ruling of the Court on the impanelling of the jury compelling counsel to exhaust their peremptory challenges before the jury box was full. The Judge warmly denied making any such ruling and was sustained by the record. Mr. Stevens reiterated his assertion and declared the exception a vital one, as in the case of Lindsay vs. the People, reported in 6th Barker, a conviction had been set aside on a similar exception. Judge Westbrook held that the case cited did not cover the ground. The exceptions of the counsel for the prisoner and the amendments offered by the prosecution were settled at 2 o'clock and the court adjourned. Mr. Stevens revised the bill of exceptions this afternoon and will send it with his points there at once and stay to Judge Westbrook at Kingston to-morrow. There will be no oral arguments. Judge Westbrook promised an immediate decision and said he would grant the writ and stay if there were any possible grounds for it. Latrimouille is apparently as unconcerned as ever.

Beating a Bed-Ridden Woman.

Annie Walton of 5 Batavia street came before Justice Wandell yesterday and charged Andrew Tobin, her brother-in-law, with assault on herself and her bed-ridden mother. She said that Tobin came home drunk on Thursday night, threw the sick woman from her bed, hurled furniture upon her, and beat her with a club. When Annie Walton screamed for help he turned upon her and beat her. The young woman was badly bruised. She showed a doctor's certificate that her mother was suffering from concussion of the brain. Tobin was held for trial.

Charges Against a Steamer's Management.

The Commissioners of Emigration are investigating charges made by steerage passengers in the steamer W. A. Schalten, from Rotterdam, who allege that during the recent passage of that steamer to this port cattle were stowed in the steerage, to the great annoyance and that other causes contributed to the unwholesome condition of the vessel. They also allege that water and hay were kept in the steerage where fires from the pipes and cigars of passengers might have ignited them.
