MRS. SCHUTZ'S INSANITY.

Her Queer Story—Trying to Murder her Husband in their Room at Night.

From the Rochester Union and Advertiser.

In Philadelphia on Thursday, a middle-aged woman, claiming to be Mary Shick of this city, sought the protection of the police, saying she had been pursued all night, beaten with clubs and bruised from head to foot. Her husband, she said, was Joseph Shick. She was a native of Brussels, in Belgium. Their wedded life had lasted seventeen years, but recently she found that her husband was unfaithful, paying attentions to a young woman. Finding herself an obstacle to their intimacy, she received to return to Brussels, and as a preliminary drew from the bank at Rochester $3,000 which was deposited there in her own name. She informed her husband of this and he appeared indifferent about the matter. When she secured her money she bought a bill of exchange from D. W. Powers for 15,000 francs, payable by the Bank of Brussels. As corroborative of this part of her story she produced the bill and gave it to the detective for security. For safety she did not leave it at home, but in the care of a lady friend until she was ready to leave. After she had packed her trunks and was equipped with funds for expenses on the journey, her husband asked her if she had her money. When she answered affirmatively, he seized her and in a violent effort wrested her purse from her and took $158. He then searched her trunks, but was unable to find the $3,000 he supposed she had, on account of her precaution. Then, she said, he had her arrested and sent to the Lunatic Asylum at Utica. After three days spent there she was released through the intervention of her friends and returned to Rochester, where she secured her trunks. On Saturday last she went to New York and stopped at Reinhardt's Hotel, on Greenwich street, close by Castle Garden, to await the sailing of the steamer for Antwerp. While there she became so frenzied with the notion that her husband would get on her track and secure her and take the money that she became insane. She could not account for her subsequent movements until she found herself in Philadelphia.

The woman's real name is Mrs. Schutz, and her husband resides on North avenue, in this city. Mr. Schutz claims that when he married Mrs. Schutz she was a widow and had in her possession $1,000. This was deposited in a bank, and by accumulated interest and other additions it had swelled to $3,000. Some time ago his wife began to exhibit symptoms of insanity and thought her husband was throwing poisoned dust on her. In order to pacify his wife, if possible, Mr. Schutz had the title of the $3,000 transferred from his name to her's, but she kept continually growing worse, and it was considered advisable to have her malady attended to. A committee of three physicians examined her, and on their report an order was obtained from Hon. P. B. Rutnell, Special County Judge, consigning Mrs. Schutz to Utica. Previous to this, however, her husband had paid a visit to Utica and made arrangements for her being well taken care of, paying $12 for two weeks' board in advance. After she had been there for a day or so, Schutz paid his wife a visit, and, finding she was put into a compartment with a lot of other women, took her home again. She then expressed a desire to go to her friends in Brussels, and on the 15th of last month obtained a bill of exchange on the Bank of Brussels from D. W. Powers for 15,000 francs. Her husband gave her besides $125 for travelling expenses, and she left on her journey, which terminated in the manner described.

Detective Lauer and the husband reached Philadelphia at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and in the custody of Mrs. Schutz, with her belongings, were transferred to them, the bill of exchange being given to Lauer, who signed a receipt for it. They then took the 11 A. M. train for home, but found on arrival at Watkins at 12 o'clock last night that the train did not go any further. Apartments were taken in the hotel, Schutz and his wife being in one room and Lauer in the next. After the parties had been in bed an hour Lauer was awakened by hearing cries of murder proceeding from the other room, and on bursting in the door found that Mrs. Schutz had tried to kill her husband by stabbing him in the neck with a large pocket knife. On the officer's entrance she threw the knife out of the window, and it was subsequently found on the ground below. Dr. Glass of Watkins told Schutz that he had had a very narrow escape from death. Had the knife penetrated an eighth of an inch further he would have been killed. He dressed the wounds as well as possible, but advised the injured man to have a doctor examine them as soon as he arrived in Rochester. This morning the three reached here in safety, and Schutz immediately took his wife home.

LOOKING FOR HER LOST CHILD.

The Child Seventy Years Old, the Mother Over One Hundred.

From the St. Louis Dispatch.

Picking her way through the wagons and vehicles that crowded Chestnut and Main streets about 10 o'clock this morning, an old, wrinkled-faced woman, neatly dressed in a light calico dress and white apron, entered the Chestnut street police station, and, approaching the office railing, asked of Sergeant Watkins with a true Kentucky accent:

"Have you seen my lost child, Captain?"

The evident fact that the woman was at least forty years beyond the usual age of the mothers of "lost children" somewhat puzzled Sergeant Watkins, who, however, overcame his astonishment sufficiently to ask:

"What is your daughter's name?"

"Becky Raney," answered the woman.

"And her age?"

"Seventy years," again she promptly answered.

"What is your name?"

"Jane Raney."

"How old are you?"

"One hundred and seventeen."

"And you are looking for your lost child, who is seventy years old?"

"Yes, Captain; you see Becky will go on sprees. Last Friday my gal went to the Dispensary to get some medicine, and never come home since. She will go on sprees."

Sergeant Watkins informed Jane that the officers had brought in no "young one" of that name and age. After finishing her business with the Sergeant, the reporter approached her, and the following conversation ensued:

"How old did you say you were?"

"One hundred and seventeen."

"And your lost daughter Becky?"

"Seventy."

"Why, you do not look so old—you have all your teeth yet."

"Yes, I've got a good many of 'em, but that all rotten but two. I'm sure I'm 117 years old. I was born in Kentucky, in—let me see; I forget the year—in 1762. I can tell you all about Washington's war, and I can tell you all about the earthquake at New Madrid, for I was there. I was married when I was 17, and I've got three husbands buried in Alton. When I came to St. Louis, a long while ago, there were no steamboats, and there were only log cabins here. I'm pretty poor, now. I would have starved to-day, if it wasn't for an old lady that lives near me on Second and Cedar. She gave me five cents this morning and I bought bread with it. I only had coffee and sugar myself. I guess Becky has gone on a spree. She works out and makes $3 a month."

A Monster of the Deep.

From the Portland Argus.

Yesterday about 6 P. M., as two young men, Herbert H. York of this city and Arthur H. White of Boston, were returning from Cow Island, where they had been fishing for mackerel, they saw a large fin, apparently three feet high and equally as long, rise from the water. Watching carefully, they saw, about thirty-five feet from it, something which resembled the tail of a whale and also the nose, connecting the fin and tail of the monster, which appeared about five feet wide. It remained in this position but a minute and sank slowly, only to rise again directly astern of their boat and less than ten feet from them. They were unable even to get a glimpse of the head, as it was all the time under water, but they both saw the part described above, and consider themselves fortunate in not having their boat overturned. The monster, when first seen, was about half way between Peak's Island and Diamond Cove, going in the direction of Cow Island. The young men are both positive that the figures given are less than the actual measurement.
