SHOOTING AT A BURGLAR.

MR. WILLIAM SCHNELL'S EXCITING ADVENTURE AT MIDNIGHT.

Surprising a Thief in his Kitchen and Firing Upon Him at Short Range—A Race for the Roof and the Robber's Successful Escape.

Mr. William Schnell is one of the solid men of the Tenth Ward. He lives in the second story of the large five-story French flat house at Stanton and Chrystie streets. The house, which is of brick with Nova Scotia stone trimmings, is about 100 feet high, and its roof is protected by a tall iron fence terminating in sharp pointed spikes. From the open scuttle access to or from neighboring roofs can only be had by scaling this chevaux de frise. Mr. Schnell also owns the adjoining houses in Chrystie and Stanton streets, a wholesale store at Stanton and Allen streets, besides other property. During the past few weeks he has been travelling with his wife and maid-servant at Saratoga, Lake George, and Long Branch, leaving his apartments at 25 Stanton street locked and under charge of the janitor.

On Thursday afternoon Mr. Schnell was summoned to New York on business. He reached Stanton street at a quarter past 11. He found the hall doors locked, but got in by means of his night key, and groped his way through the darkness to his apartments in the first story. These consist of a front and back parlor, dining room, two bedrooms, kitchen, and bathroom, the last three being at the rear of the house. The suite is handsomely furnished, and the buffet in the dining room contained silver and other valuables. A window in the bathroom adjoining opens on to the landing, about seven feet from the floor, and is guarded from the outside by three iron bars, with interstices between them of nine inches. On passing the window that night Mr. Schnell heard a sort of scratching noise, but, thinking it was mice, paid no attention to it. He had always taken unusual precautions against locking not only the outer doors to his suite of rooms, but also the connecting doors between. He unlocked the dining room door, locking it again after he had entered, and, going into the bedroom at the rear of the house, undressed and went to sleep.

After his hall slumbered twenty minutes, he was awakened by a noise apparently from the direction of the kitchen. This time it sounded much louder than before, and Mr. Schnell made up his mind to see what it was. He pulled his revolver from under his pillow, and picking his way in his bare feet across the bedroom floor, noiselessly unlocked the door leading into the dining room. A flood of light pouring through the opposite fanlight revealed the presence of some one in the room beyond. In crossing the dining room Mr. Schnell stumbled against a chair. The light was quickly extinguished. He listened at the crack of the door, and heard the breathing of some one on the other side of it. Then there was a crawling, muffled sound as of some one shoving along the side of the wall, and then all was perfectly quiet. Mr. Schnell determined on his course of action. He placed a parlor match in his teeth, cocked his revolver with his right hand, softly turned the key in the lock, flinging the door wide open, and struck the match. It was all done in little more than a second. The flaring light of the match revealed a pale muscular man, in his shirt sleeves and barefooted, standing in the recess back of the door and within two feet of the excited householder. The stranger struck savagely at Schnell, hitting him in the eye, and Schnell fired. The man groaned and exclaimed: "My God, I'm hit!" For a moment Mr. Schnell was blinded by the smoke, but as it cleared away he heard the rapid patter of bare feet on the stairs leading to the roof. As he flung the door wide open and started after the thief. The chase was close, up the four long flights to the roof. On emerging through the scuttle the burglar paused for a moment as though undecided which way to turn. Then putting forth all his strength, he swung with the agility of a wounded deer to the edge of the southern parapet wall, and steadying himself on the dizzy height, one hundred feet above the pavement, planted his feet on the horizontal fan-shaped spikes which separated it from the next building. Then he dextrously lowered himself, swinging clear of the sharp projecting points, and leaped on the roof of 198 Chrystie. Mr. Schnell did not follow him further. The scuttle of 198 stood open, it being a hot night, and down it the thief hurried, not stopping for breath until he had arrived at the lowest story. Here he found the hall door locked and bolted, and was forced to turn into the yard at the back, where an outhouse ten feet high was built up against a sixteen-foot board fence. Lizzie Adams and Dollie Harkins, who live at the back of 198, and who, with their parents, had just returned from a picnic at Jones's Wood, were startled by seeing a barefooted and coatless man crawl out into the area, seize a wooden table, jam it against the outhouse, and then drag himself slowly and laboriously to the roof of the shed. The girls screamed, and the robber, turning to them, exclaimed in a hoarse, trembling voice:

"For me! Don't say anything, for God's sake!"

Then he swung himself over the wall and fell with a crash through the adjoining grape vines, tearing them downstand landing in the soft earth of a geranium patch. Little Paul Seiler, who lives in 196 Chrystie street and had just returned home from Coney Island, was bringing his father a pitcher of beer, and saw the man fall through the vines. Paul shouted to his father, whereat the burglar rose to his feet, and groaning audibly, limped across the area to the southeast corner, where a tall tree stood in the angle of the fence. He scrambled up this, got on the roof of an adjoining outhouse, and, jumping down into the garden of a house in Forsyth street, was lost to sight.

Meanwhile Policemen Barney and Kane had been summoned, and a search was made of the entire premises. The door of the front hall bedroom was found open, and in this it is conjectured the thief had made his original entry, retiring, however, when he found the rooms beyond locked. Later a still more important discovery was made. The middle iron rod or bar of the bathroom window was found to be loose, and on examination it proved to have been twisted from its rivet, leaving a space wide enough to admit the body of an adroit crackman. A wooden ledge ran along the side of the wall immediately below the bathroom window, on which the robber had stood while working at the bar. From the bathroom to the kitchen was an easy step, and by pressing back the spring lock of the kitchen door a way of exit into the hall was left to be used in case of retreat. It is supposed that the invader sneaked up the hallway in the evening, and finding the hall bedroom door open, had entered that, in order to await a proper hour for commencing operations. The hall door leading to Stanton street was locked at 10 o'clock and the gas turned out at 11. Mr. Schnell arrived at 11½, entering with his latch key; and two other occupants of the house, Mr. Seering and Mr. Harrington, entered at 11½ and 12, respectively. The shot was fired a few minutes after 12, so that the burglar, in getting the bar loose in the interval, must have worked nimbly. Another theory is that the man entered the house a day or two before and loosened the bar, so as to be ready for work on that particular night. Mr. Schnell, is a small man, and the burglar is described by those who saw him as a stout built, rough fellow, with light hair and moustache. In his flight he dropped his hat, which is of mixed straw, with a broad black ribbon.

That the burglar was hit is almost certain. At the time Schnell fired, the burglar was two feet from his pistol, with his back against the wall of the bathroom—a thorough search of which reveals no marks of any kind, although the bullet was conical and of good size.

Furniture on the Installment Plan.

Mrs. Annie Korner, the wife of a German tailor of 429 West Forty-first street, bought some furniture of John Lynch of 204 Eighth avenue, and was to pay $3 every two weeks. She made several payments, but was unable to make the one due this week, and on Thursday Samuel France and John Knipe, employees of Lynch, entered her house and took a looking glass, worth $6. In Jefferson Market Police Court, yesterday, Justice Murray said: "This money or your life business must be stopped. I will hold these men for larceny unless the property is returned at once. You must return it politely," Justice Murray continued, "and you must put it just where you found it. I will give you an hour and a half to do it in."

Mr. Bergh's Society at Work.

Thomas Colton, the driver of car 82 of the Third Avenue Railroad, and James Nugent, the changer of horses at Fifth street and Third avenue, were held in $200 bail by Justice Smith yesterday to answer for cruelty to a horse.

Officer Lopez of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said: "I noticed a horse attached to a Harlem car coming to Fifth street. It seemed exhausted, and staggered and fell as it was unhitched. I examined the animal, and found blood flowing copiously from its nostrils. The animal could not lift its leg, and blood flowed from the orifices at its front right leg. I watched to see whether the conductor would have the heart to hitch up the animal. Then I saw Nugent take the suffering animal to the rear of a Harlem car. I arrested the man, and took the horse up to our hospital."

Killed by Falling Down a Hatchway.

Late on Thursday afternoon, as the steamship Saratoga, which had been anchored on the upper Quarantine grounds, off Robbin's Reef, for several days, taking in her cargo, was about to clear for Havana, Gilbert W. Boss, third officer of the vessel, fell down the hatchway and down to the hold, dying almost instantly. Boss was an Englishman, 28 years of age. Among his effects were a number of love letters from a young woman in Boston. Each of the letters had a postscript which said: "Dear Gil, three years is a long time to wait."

Wanted Pay for a Clubbing.

A day laborer made a complaint of assault at the Central Office, yesterday, against a policeman of the Prince street station, who, he said, struck him a blow with his club, nearly breaking his arm, and incapacitating him from work for two days. If the policeman would pay him $5 for the time lost he would withdraw the charge, but Superintendent Walling would permit no compounding of the clubbing.

LANDLORD AND TENANT.

Leases under which Tenants' Property may be Seized for Default.

Mr. Demas Barnes, ex-editor of the Brooklyn Argus, is the owner of the building at 21 Park row. The building contains sixty rooms which are let singly or en suite for business purposes. A Mr. Sharp, formerly a member of the staff of the Argus, attends to the letting of the offices for Mr. Barnes. Would-be tenants are required to sign a lease that Mr. Barnes views as legally irreproachable. The vital clause in it, he says, is copied from the leases given by the Astors and other great property holders in this city. The clause is as follows:

That if any default be made in the payment of said rent, and said sum for steam-heating, Croton water, or janitor's fees, or any part thereof, at the time or times above specified, or if any default be made in the performance of any of the covenants or agreements herein contained, the said landlord or his representative may distrain for any rent, steam-heating, Croton water tax, or assessment, or janitor's fees that may be due, upon any property belonging to the tenant, sub-tenant, or any other person, in or upon the said premises, whether the same be exempt from execution and distress by law, or not, and sell the same at public sale, when and how he, the said landlord or his representative or attorney may desire; and the said tenant, sub-tenant, or any other person in or upon said premises, hereby waives all legal rights which he may have to hold or retain suy such property, under any exemption laws now in force in this State, or in any other way, meaning and intending hereby, to give the landlord a valid and perfect lien upon any and all goods, chattels, and other property in or upon the premises hereby leased to the said tenant, as security for the payment of the said rent and the performance of said covenants in manner aforesaid; and the landlord, his representative, or attorney, in case of the violation of the covenants and conditions hereinbefore mentioned, or any part thereof, may also re-enter said premises and remove all persons and things therefrom, either by force or otherwise, without being liable to any prosecution therefor, and re-let the said premises, as the agent of said tenant, and receive the rent thereof, applying the same, including the net sales of any property they may have been distrained and sold as above, first, to the payment of such expenses as he, the said landlord, may be put to in re-entering, and then to the payment of the rent due by these presents, and the balance (if any) to be paid over to the said tenant, who shall remain liable for any deficiency.

This clause, in Mr. Barnes's view, gives him a perfect chattel mortgage, in effect, upon any furniture that may be in the tennant's rooms when the tenant fails to make any payment that he stipulated for in the lease.

William M. Gallaher, attorney and counsellor-at-law, who was one of Mr. Barnes's tenants in 1878, differs with Mr. Barnes as to the effect of this clause. This difference is believed to be of importance to many of the thousands of renters of offices in this city.

On the morning of the 26th of July, 1878, Mr. Gallaher avers, he went to his office in rooms 34 and 35 in Mr. Barnes's building, but found the doors fastened. There were padlocks over the ordinary locks. He was told that Mr. Barnes had ordered the janitor to lock up the rooms and deny him admission. He had had no forewarning of such a course on the part of Mr. Barnes, and he had only legal steps been taken to dispossess him. He learned that Mr. Barnes based his action upon a claim for an unpaid balance of rent, whereas no rent was due. He was deprived of the use of his law library and the furniture of his office, valued at $900, by the summary proceeding, and moreover he was kept away from legal documents essential to the conduct of his business. From these causes he has suffered, and continues to suffer—Mr. Barnes has not yielded possession of the office nor any of its contents—irreparable damage to his feelings and professional reputation, wherefore he sues for $10,000 damages.

Mr. Gallaher, Mr. Barnes avers, owed three quarters' rent on the 26th of July, 1878, and would have owed four quarters if he had been allowed to remain in the rooms. But he learned about the 26th of July that Mr. Gallaher had given a chattel mortgage on his law books and furniture to a relative, and had confessed judgment for their full value to a Sixth avenue liquor dealer, intending, Mr. Barnes avers, to evade the responsibility he assumed when he signed the lease. His attorney then advised him to close the doors of Mr. Gallaher's office against Mr. Gallaher, and deny him admission until the overdue rent was paid. He acted upon this advice. Mr. Gallaher presented himself a few days later, and said that he was unable to pay what he owed Mr. Barnes, but hoped to be able to do so within the week. Then he visited his office several times and obtained papers that he said he needed. When Mr. Gallaher signed the lease he voluntarily made his furniture security for unpaid charges under the lease, and he has not been damaged at all, Mr. Barnes avers, by the simple enforcement of the terms of the lease.

Judge Van Hoesen granted an order in Mr. Gallaher's suit to the examination of Mr. Barnes before the trial. Mr. Barnes, Lawyer Christopher Fine, Mr. Gallaher's counsel, says, disobeyed the subpœna under this order. Judge Van Hoesen thereupon issued an attachment for Mr. Barnes's person, and he was taken into custody by a deputy sheriff, but was released on paying the fees and charges, and promising to appear for examination when required. Mr. Barnes says that he had no desire to evade examination, but was mistaken as to the date on which it was to be held. He was examined yesterday. He testified in detail as to the facts in relation to the summary ejectment of Mr. Gallaher.

The examination was not ended.

THE WRONG CHANDLER.

A Mistake that was not Discovered until after the Champagne.

From the San Francisco Post.

William E. Chandler, the Secretary of the National Republican Committee, arrived here last Wednesday, and the next morning W. E. Chandler, an Eastern acrobat and juggler, also reached this city from Chicago to fill an engagement at Woodward's Gardens. Last evening our State Central Republican Committee, assisted by many prominent Republicans, tendered the former distinguished politician a dinner at the Palace Hotel, at which there was represented an imposing array of political and financial big bugs of the party. After the steak-wrestling and knife-swallowing had in a measure subsided, the company braced back in their chairs, closed their eyes in the attitude of earnest attention, and the speeches began. Fourteen well-known politicians said that never in the whole course of their public career had they been called upon to do justice to an occasion more fraught with, &c., &c. Eleven heavy capitalists felt proud of the opportunity of extending a characteristic California welcome to one whose eminent services, &c., &c. Eight editors remarked that as what had already been said had been on the whole so well said, they felt that nothing remained for them but to join in extending the right hand of fellowship to one whose signal abilities, &c.

The occasion of all this oratorical taffy encased the edibles and surrounded the Roederer with a heartiness that did the souls of his entertainers good, and when the toast of the evening, "Our distinguished guest," was drunk, he steadied himself by placing one hand on the Websterian forehead of Superintendent Dodge and the other on Senator Sharon's virgin dome of thought, and responded as follows:

"Gentlemen—my dear boys: I really am-er—knocked endways by this way up blowout. You do me proud. I've-er—heard tell that you California fellers treated Booth and Jefferson and them big bugs of their professhun bang up, but I didn't know you came out so allfired strong on us variety people. However, I claim to be "The Only Chandler," and I can get away with any man in my line of business that walks on legs. There ain't one of 'em kin keep four cannon balls in the air at the same time—not one, I know. There's that little Dutchman—Klopheimer—who bills to do my hoop contortion act, but he's a fraud, gents—a perfect fraud. The hoop he crawls through with a glass of water balanced on his nose is just the same size as mine, I admit; but then it's a rubber hoop, and I can prove it. I'm going to have a benefit next Saturday evening, and I hope you'll all come. Only six bits for reserved seats. I will now pass round the table with the tickets."

But before "The Great Sensgambian Juggler" could consummate his frugal intentions he felt like one who trod alone a banquet hall deserted. His guests had quietly, but firmly lit out, and as we go to press the miserable committee, who had captured the wrong Chandler, are still hiding in the foothills until the thing blows over.

MERE MENTION.

Music in Prospect Park, Brooklyn, to-day, at 4 o'clock.

An offer of $30,000 for the famous trotter Rarus was rejected yesterday.

Fortescue Beach, N. J., is now reached from the bay by means of a pier 900 feet long.

While felling trees, George Nelson of Mineola, L. I., was killed, a tree falling across his body.

Two hundred car loads of peaches arrived in this city by the Pennsylvania Railroad yesterday.

The body of a drowned man, 35 years of age, was found near the Ninth street bridge, Brooklyn, yesterday.

The last of the Alexandra Exhibition Company's pyrotechnic displays at Manhattan Beach, this evening.

The bodies of four men, apparently seamen, have been washed ashore on Gardiner's Island since the storm.

New Jersey farmers are lamenting the scarcity of apples, which means that apple whiskey will be scarce.

Seventeen hundred cans of milk, containing an average of forty quarts each, are brought in by the New Jersey Midland Railroad daily to Jersey City.

The body of the woman found in the river at Martin's Stores, Brooklyn, on Tuesday was yesterday identified as that of Mrs. Sarah Nagle, 45 years of age.

One of the strikers at Paterson, N. J., has been compelled to bury his wife by subscription. His home looks squalidly poor, and he is drowning his cares in drink.

The cranberry crop of Ocean County, N. J., is ruined, owing to worms, drought, scald, and grasshoppers. Englewood township, producing usually 20,000 bushels, will not yield 3,000 bushels.

Inspectors Hussey and Garrison of the Special Treasury Agent's office, having found Manuel Trivilla, a cigar dealer under the St. Germain Hotel, selling smuggled cigars, yesterday, seized his entire stock.

Mr. Johnson of Quaker Settlement, Warren County, N. J., while walking in the road near that place on Tuesday last, encountered a large pilot snake, which he killed. It had large hooked fangs and was over three feet long.

There was a single scull race of a mile and a half between J. F. Martin of New York and E. Ross for a silver cup off Yonkers yesterday morning. Martin won by three lengths in 10 minutes 40 seconds. Ross's time was 10 minutes 45 seconds.

An incident of daily occurrence at Passaic Bridge, N. J., is the appearance of a little girl at the depot, who awaits the arrival of the train with a bouquet of choice flowers, which she sends by a conductor to be placed on the grave of a playmate of hers who lately died.

The immense ice house at the Jersey City abattoir, in which beef is kept for shipment, is probably the coldest place to be found just now hereabouts. The thermometer yesterday marked 33° below zero there, and a party of gentlemen who were inspecting the place wore ulsters, and narrowly escaped having their ears frostbitten.

DENIS COPPERS'S BODY

Not to be Disturbed until after an Argument a Week from Monday Next.

The Chambers of the Supreme Court were crowded yesterday morning by those who were interested in the legal action upon the refusal of the Calvary Cemetery authorities to allow the body of Denis Coppers to be interred in a plot that he bought about a year ago. The refusal was based upon the fact that Mr. Coppers was a Free Mason, and the burial of any dead person in the cemetery who belonged to any secret society was prohibited by the conditions of the sale of the plot.

The body having been deposited in a receiving vault, the brothers of Mr. Coppers—Edward, George, and Frederick Coppers—obtained an order from Judge Van Brunt restraining the removal of the body, except to bury it in Mr. Coppers's plot, and to show, yesterday morning, why the injunction should not be made permanent. The plaintiffs also ask judgment against the defendant "cemetery" for $1,000, alleging that they have been injured in that amount in anxiety and distress of mind, and in being obliged to consult and employ counsel to assert their legal and equitable rights.

Mr. John E. Develin, who appeared for the cemetery, asked Judge Van Brunt that the hearing be adjourned, in order that he might have time to prepare his argument. He had not just seen the plaintiffs' papers, and had had no time even to read them through.

Judge Van Brunt said he would postpone the hearing if the other side consented.

Mr. C. W. Brooke, who represented the Messrs. Coppers, said he had no objection if, in the mean time, the injunction order remained in full force, and that the family of the dead man have the privilege of preparing the body for preservation.

Mr. Develin said there was no objection to that, and everything would be recorded the plaintiffs that was reasonable and fair.

The hearing was then set down for a week from Monday.

Mrs. Boswell's Husband.

Jennie Boswell, a seamstress, of 214 West Seventeenth street, has supported her husband, George Boswell, and two children, by sewing shirts. Boswell is by trade a mason, but the police say he is a drunkard. A week ago he stole a dozen shirts that his wife had made and pawned them, and yesterday he stole a dozen unmade shirts. Mrs. Boswell chased him, and Policeman Kelly arrested him. Justice Murray sent him to Blackwell's Island for six months.
