TWO FAIRS IN NEW JERSEY.

HUNDREDS OF SIGHTSEERS IN HOHOKUS AND PLAINFIELD.

Union and Middlesex Counties Uniting in a Joint Exhibition—An Interesting Collection of Paintings at the Bergen County Fair.

The second day of the Bergen County Agricultural Society's Fair, on the grounds of the Hohokus Valley Driving Park Association, was a great success, judging by the number of persons present and the amount of enjoyment they seemed to have. The scene was enlivened by the presence of the Saddle River brass band, which has become famous through the story of how Garry Ackerman, the baritone who played the horn, was excommunicated a year ago from the church in Saddle River, N. J., to which he belonged, because he played at a public dance and in a house where liquor was sold. Garry Ackerman was at the fair yesterday, arrayed in gorgeous uniform, helmet hat, plume, and all, as were his blowing brethren. The Saddle River brass band played several times, generally out of time, and it was undoubtedly the quality of their music that led a nervous Granger to publicly revile a member of the band and dare him to a trial of prowess. The musician modestly bore the berating until forbearance ceased to be a virtue, and then pulled off his gorgeous spike-tailed, epauleted coat, his helmet hat, and his paper collar, and then and there in a masterly manner proceeded to black the Granger's eyes. This being done, the musician went back to the grand stand and joined in a rendition of Nancy Lee that caused a diminutive donkey on exhibition to lift up his voice in sympathetic lamentation.

The most interesting thing on the fair grounds was the house belonging to the S. T. Banta estate, which was used as an art gallery. There was a collection of paintings that would do credit to a more pretentious exhibition. Mr. Nathaniel Orr, the engraver, exhibited choice landscapes by Sonntag and Copestick; Mr. I. W. England exhibited a portrait of Hendrick Hudson, by Van Dyke, a Christ and a Madonna, by Van Belen, very old, 1560-1632, and a pastoral landscape said to be a genuine Claude. He also sent a fine water color of a lion and lioness, painted by Simpson, a pupil of Landseer, and the great animal painter had added finishing touches to this painting with his own hand. Ezra Miller sent a painting representing Shakespeare and Ben Jonson, painted by Oliver in 1603. O. J. Victor showed landscapes by Innes and Griswold, a characteristic Tait, and an original drawing by F. O. C. Darley. But the most interest was manifested in the paintings of Joe Jefferson. Besides an Arboreline and two queer little things done in bark, the actor sent five large canvases of his own painting. Evidently they are scenes about his Louisiana plantation. At least three, with the waters of the lagoon, the Southern foliage, and the hanging moss, show Southern studies. The best was a large wood scene, with water in the foreground. All have the same curious treatment of light and color, a pale green prevailing, which, when looked at a little, seems quite the correct thing in nature.

In the centre of one of the rooms stood an ancient table, and on it a card saying that it was owned and used by George Washington during the Revolutionary war, and was afterward bought from him and handed down from generation to generation to the present owner, Mrs. J. R. Westervelt of Wyckoff. On a mantelpiece were six ancient tiles, on which were depicted Scriptural scenes. They were taken from a fireplace in the old Hohokus mansion, where Aaron Burr wooed the beautiful Theodosia Prevost.

In an adjoining room a Paterson undertaker exhibited the very latest thing in coffins and shrouds, and the ornaments of the former and the elaborate quilting and plaiting and stitching in the latter were admired.

Up stairs was where the Bergen County ladies congregated. There were shown tidies, cushions, and bed quilts, particularly bed quilts. One of these useful articles, made by Mrs. J. E. Zabriskie, was said to contain 129,600 stitches. It was not nearly as gorgeous as one made by Mrs. H. P. White, whereon were depicted in pieces of variegated calico rare birds, beasts, and plants, evidently representatives of paleozoic times.

Outside a constant throng centred around a phaeton and three very little ponies, exhibited by Joseph Jefferson, who has taken much interest in this new venture. Another throng surrounded two cages wherein slept two cats, a white and a Maltese, and a diminutive black and tan mother of two black and blind puppies.

"Why, they're bigger than their mother," said a young woman, looking at the pups; but she added cautiously, "according to their size."

Ezra Miller's buffaloes were also much looked at.

The horse trots occupied much time and attention, and were interesting.

The first annual fair of the Mutual Agricultural Association of Union and Middlesex counties, N. J., was begun Monday, on the Association grounds, two miles south of Plainfield. To-day the fair ends. The bright, new fence that runs around the immense enclosure, the new grand stand, the new ladies' hall, and the long, low sheds for the exhibition of horses, sheep, and cattle glisten in the sunlight. From the Central Railroad depot to the grounds, conveyances in scores plied back and forth to the accommodation of travellers. For ten miles around in the farmers brought in the two-seated wagons that they drive to church on Sundays, and charged twenty cents for every passenger. Some of the vehicles were so shabby that Plainfield people would not ride in them. The day was warm, and the dust thick. The buildings for showing the results of the farmers' and their wives' hand labor are huddled in a group in the centre of the grounds. Some of them were hastily put up to serve the present exhibition, and more substantial buildings are to be put up next year. From a three-poled tent resounded the commingled quacking of ducks, gabbling of geese, crowing of chanticleers, cackling of hens, and the quitquit of fat Thanksgiving turkeys. Near by were heard the amicable grunt of Berkshire, Yorkshire, and Cheshire porkers, and to the poultry, pigs, and sheep women paid as much attention as to their own special competitions in the Ladies' Hall. On the pens where stood Holstein, Alderney, and Jersey stock were posted long genealogical accounts of the animals. Under another three-poled canvas tent were grouped carriages made in Rahway. Popping up here and there at unexpected places on the grounds a bass drummer, accompanied by a brass band, pounded out Pinafore airs.

Places of refreshment were strung out in one long row facing the race course, and were of the most heterogeneous nature. The charcoal smoke from a sausage kitchen was blown into the eyes of the consumers of oysters next door, and the voice of the young man who shouted: "Fresh Californian humpbacked peanuts right off the fire!" resounded in the ears of the girls who were buying confectionery at the table close at hand. Lager beer was offered in unlimited quantities in the same row, but the Jersey farmers did not take kindly to it. The side shows were so far on one side, and in a corner, that the industrious gentlemen in silk hats who invited sightseers to just step in for 10 cents, yelled themselves hoarse in attracting attention.

There were three trots yesterday, all for horses or stallions owned in the county. Before the trot a number of young men in costumes gathered in a ring inside of the race course and in front of the grand stand to compete in athletic sports. The games were open to all amateurs in Union and Middlesex counties. Gold and silver medals were the prizes offered. The 100-yards run was won by H. Perrine of South Amboy, in 10¾ seconds. In the one-mile walk R. A. Meeker was first in 8 minutes 31¾ seconds. J. Hervey Doane won the 440 yard run in 58¾ seconds. Last was a go-as-you-please, one hour contest. Five athletes started at the word go. They were E. W. Runyon, Fred. J. Clark, J. B. Platt, and C. W. Runyon of Plainfield, and N. L. Wheeler of Newark. Platt won by covering 8¼ miles. Clark was second.

CLUBBER WILLIAMS ARRAIGNED.

His Friends Testify that, Instead of Violence, Gentleness was Displayed.

Capt. Williams of the Thirtieth street police, was arraigned yesterday before Commissioners Wheeler and Morrison on a charge preferred by John Campbell, a reporter. It was charged that, when the reporter went to the Thirtieth street station, on the evening of Aug. 19, to get information concerning the arrest of Joseph Howard, Jr., who had been taken into custody the previous evening for interfering with one of Williams's policemen's abuse of a citizen, Williams refused, with much profanity, to give the information. On the reporter's persisting, the doorman, by order of Williams, thrust the reporter from the station house.

Mr. Campbell called ex-Commissioner Gardner, Sergeant Westervelt, and the doorman to testify in substantiation of his charge, but all three witnesses, with a uniformity noticeable in police trials, testified that no profane words were uttered, and that the doorman used no violence. Williams began his defence by asking the complainant a number of questions, tending to imply that the latter had quitted his country (Scotland) for his country's good. Among other things, he asked him whether he had ever robbed a church. Commissioner Morrison warned Williams that he was incurring a risk in such a mode of defence, and ordered the questions and answers stricken out, with the exception of an admission of the complainant that, under a misapprehension, he was in prison four hours on a charge of libel, in Montreal. The accused summoned several hangers-on about his station, who swore that no profane language was used, and that the doorman gently led the reporter to the door by the arm. Williams concluded by asking permission to show the complainant's professional inaccuracy, in reporting the theft of a column of the elevated railway, which Mr. Campbell denied.
