CHASING RIVER PIRATES.

HALTED IN THE STREAM BY THREE BUCCANEERS OF HELL GATE.

Held at Bay with the Pirates' Pistols till they Made their Escape on the Long Island Shore—Mr. Astor's Sails and Other Booty.

When William Darling, who lives on City Island and keeps a sail loft, went to his shop yesterday morning, he found that burglars had been there in the night and ransacked the place. They had taken away, among other things, about $500 worth of sails, including a new set just finished for Mr. Astor's yacht. It was evident that the job had been done by river thieves, and Darling inquired among his neighbors whether they had noticed any suspicious craft in the vicinity. He learned from a colored man that a sloop, with a crew of three rough-looking fellows, had been anchored off City Island on the previous day, and that the men were ostensibly engaged in a fishing expedition. Early in the morning the three men had been seen rowing away from the island in a small boat.

On obtaining this information, Darling found a Pelham constable, and, with a neighbor, started in pursuit in a fishing smack, hoping to overtake the pirates before they reached this city, where he conjectured they would come to sell their booty. He sailed down as far as Throgg's Neck without overhauling them. Fortunately he met a steam tug, and, on inquiring of the skipper whether he had seen the piratical craft on his way up, Darling was told that such a vessel had gone down the river. He then chartered the tug, to give chase, and on reaching Astoria Point, at Hell Gate, the pursuers saw the pirates drifting down with the tide, for the wind was very light. A council was held, and it was determined to keep the sloop in sight until the men undertook to land, and then follow them and give them in charge of the police. This course was resolved upon as the most likely to result in a capture, because the sloop took the New York channel and could not make a landing on Blackwell's Island. But, instead of landing, as was expected, at one of the piers in the upper part of the city, the pirates kept on until it seemed plain that they intended to go below Blackwell's Island, where they would be able to better their chances of escape by going over to the Long Island shore. Not being sure that the property was on the sloop, although the vessel answered the description given by the colored man, Darling decided to run ashore at Sixty-first street and secure the aid of the police for the purpose of making a search. There was plenty of time for this, for the sloop got into an eddy off Fifty-sixth street point, and instead of going down the river with the tide, she began to drift back. This was about noon.

Darling and his friends ran up Sixty-first street a couple of blocks, and then they met Policeman Runge of the Fifty-ninth street force and Breen of the mounted police. The story was told, and the policemen were asked what should be done.

"Let's get a rowboat and go out to them," said Runge, and, without waiting for Darling and his men, who in their excitement did not think to make known the fact that they had a steamtug at their disposal, the policeman ran down to the river and along the piers looking for the pirates. Darling and his friends were outstripped in the race. Runge discovered the pirates trying to get their sloop out of the eddy. Two of them were in a rowboat, tugging at the oars. Runge and Breen decided that one of them had better remain on shore to head off the thieves if they tried to land. Runge got a small boat, with a single pair of oars, and a bystander volunteered to pull him out to the sloop. These movements on shore were seen by the pirates, and when Runge's boat was within a hundred yards of the sloop, a burly fellow covered him with a revolver and cried:

"You come near the sloop, and I'll shoot you."

"If you shoot, I'll shoot, too," Runge answered, and he drew his pistol. At this the man who was pulling Runge's boat dropped his oars, and said that he would not pull any further, as he did not propose to make a target of himself. Runge took the oars, but he soon found that he was not an expert oarsman.

The pirates coolly pulled their rowboat alongside the sloop and took their third man in, and with their two pairs of oars they pulled off to the Long Island shore, in full view of the officer and the small crowd that had collected on shore. The crew of the harbor police boat had rowed past the spot only a few minutes previously, and the steam tug of the pursuers, that might have run down the pirates in a few minutes, was but a few blocks distant.

Policeman Runge then pulled for the sloop which the pirates had deserted, and made her his prize. She was found to be loaded with booty, not only the property of Darling, but the proceeds of other robberies. Somebody's yacht had evidently been rifled of sails, tools, and rigging. There was on board a new harness, with an "M" on the blinders, also a powerful burglars' jimmy, a dark lantern, a rusty Colt's revolver, loaded in all the barrels; three coats, a pair of rowlocks, a lot of fishing tackle, and other property valued in all at about $1,000. All of the plunder was neatly packed and tightly stowed away except some of the sails, which were on deck. The sloop is a twenty-one-foot cat rigged boat, worth about $150.

Capt. Gunner is confident that she is owned by professional river thieves, who have been committing depredations along the river front and the East River islands. He telegraphed a description of the thieves to all the river stations and to Brooklyn, and he obtained a clue which he believes will result in the capture of the culprits. The property was taken to the police station, and when it was spread out the wonder was that so much of it could have been stowed in so small a craft. Mr. Darling and his friends were considerably crestfallen at the escape of the robbers, and they said that in their excitement they never thought of taking the policeman on the tug. Runge did not know until he went to the station house that Darling had had a tug at his command.

POLICE BOARD TRANSACTIONS.

Patrolman Nugent's Demand for Pay for his Time while he was a Prisoner

The following was read in the meeting of the Police Board yesterday:

Please take notice that I, John Nugent, a patrolman of the Police Department of the city of New York, do hereby demand payment of the sum of three hundred and eighty-seven dollars and ninety-three cents, the same being my salary as such patrolman for the months of June, July, August and September, 1879. Yours respectfully,

JOHN NUGENT, Patrolman Eighteenth Precinct.

DATED OCT. 14, 1879.

Nugent is now awaiting trial under heavy bail on a charge of complicity in the Manhattan Bank burglary. His communication was referred to the Treasurer, who, as Nugent is still a member of the police force, no steps having been taken to dismiss him, will probably be obliged to pay the amount claimed.

Mr. Morrison's motion that the messengers attached to the offices of the Commissioners be paid $800 a year instead of $600 was carried, Mr. MacLean alone dissenting.

Rule No. 118 of the Police Manual, rendering four convictions of patrolmen, when on duty, for sitting down, conversing, not properly patrolling their post, or absence from post, cause for dismissal from the Department, was rescinded on the suggestion of Mr. MacLean's motion. This was done, Mr. MacLean explained, to render it possible for the Board to dismiss a delinquent officer on less than four such convictions.

SUNK IN THE SEA.

The Loss of a Norwegian Bark that was Flying a Signal of Distress.

The bark Enigma, from St. Johns, N. B., arrived in this port yesterday, and Capt. Walker reported that he had seen a strange Norwegian bark flying a signal of distress in mid-ocean, and that she went down before he could send assistance. First Mate Robert Dimock said yesterday that when in lat. 42° and long. 37° 10', off Cape Clear about 750 miles, the Enigma fell in with a strange bark and that they separated soon after sunrise. At about 8 A. M. the stranger was on the port bow. Soon afterward another strange bark was sighted about eight and a half miles distant. As she drew nearer the bark was seen to be flying a signal of distress—a Norwegian flag at the mizzen peak and reversed. Her yards were braced up and the lower mainsail and lower topsails were as trim as could be. She seemed to be of about 800 tons burden. Her anchors were lashed on her starboard bow and she was thought to be drifting. No man was visible at the wheel through the glass, as the Enigma tacked to port to reach the vessel in distress. The weather had been fine and clear, and the bark was in perfect order aloft. A breeze had just sprung up; but even as it was a man could almost have swam to her. The Enigma could not reach her on her first tack, and Capt. Walker prepared to swing around on the starboard tack, and then it was seen that the crew of the bark that had been in company with the Enigma in the early morning were launching a boat to go to the Norwegian bark. Then the Enigma was 500 yards from the bark in distress, but the other bark was nearer. In the bark in distress not a person was visible. On her gallases were two rowboats, keel upward; but the two boats that usually ride on the forward house were missing. A tackle swung from the shrouds forward.

The Norwegian bark was sighted at 8 A. M., and now it was after 11 A. M. When first sighted the bark rode easily, but when she was nearly overhauled she was waterlogged. Capt. Walker conjectured that she had sprung a bad leak and that the seamen had deserted her in the open boats. Suddenly, as the strange bark's boat was within a few yards from the bark in distress the latter heeled over to port, struggled back for a moment, and then pitched forward and went down. The strange bark's boat was so near that it was tossed on the waves aroused by the sunken vessel, but no one was picked up.

BISHOP WHITTINGHAM'S DEATH.

The Second Oldest Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States.

At 7 o'clock yesterday morning the Right Rev. William Rollinson Whittingham, D. D., LL.D., Bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Maryland, died in his summer home in Valley street, near Llewellyn Park, West Orange, N. J. For several years he had suffered from a complication of disorders resulting from an injury to his spine, and for about a year he had been confined to his house in Baltimore and his summer home in West Orange. A few weeks ago he began preparations to return to Baltimore, but two days ago his symptoms became very unfavorable. Early yesterday morning his wife, seeing that he was dying, sent for his son, Mr. Harrison Whittingham, who lives about half a mile distant. The venerable Bishop was dead before the son arrived at his bedside.

Bishop Whittingham was born in New York city on Dec. 2, 1805, and before he had completed his twentieth year he was graduated with distinction from the General Theological Seminary in New York city. He was ordained to the ministry two years later, and his first pastoral charge was St. Mark's Church in Orange, N. J. In 1831 he became rector of St. Luke's parish in New York city, and in a few years he made a national reputation as a writer and preacher. In 1835 he was elected to the chair of Ecclesiastical History in the General Theological Seminary. He was elected Bishop of Maryland in 1846, and was consecrated in Baltimore on Sept. 17, 1846. He was the second eldest Bishop of the Episcopal Church in the United States, the Right Rev. Benjamin Bosworth Smith, Bishop of the Diocese of Kentucky, who is now living in New York city, being the oldest, having been consecrated in 1839.

Bishop Whittingham was the editor of the Churchman, and of the Family Visitor and Children's Magazine. He edited, with copious notes, "The Parish Library," a work of thirteen volumes. His last official act was the ordination to the priesthood of the Rev. William Richmond of St. Mark's Church, West Orange. Bishop Whittingham leaves a widow and four children—two sons and two daughters. During the war he was loyal to the National Government, although a majority of the clergy in his diocese were in favor of the rebellion.

The funeral is to be on Tuesday, at 12 o'clock, from St. Mark's Church, West Orange.

TRAGEDY DOWN TOWN.

Brothers-in-Law Grappling—One Believed to be Fatally Stabbed.

Mathew Gibson, longshoreman, lives at 79 Washington street. His brother-in-law, Stephen Meany, a sailor, who lives at 89 Washington street, has for some time been out of employment. On Thursday evening Meany went to Gibson's house intoxicated, and Gibson's eldest daughter led him home. At 11 o'clock he returned much more under the influence of liquor. Gibson was then in bed, and his daughter pushed Meany out into the hallway. A moment later she screamed that Meany was threatening to stab her. Gibson sprang from his room and confronted Meany, who was pursuing Miss Gibson and brandishing a large clasp knife. As soon as Meany saw Gibson he turned upon him, and in the scuffle Gibson was stabbed in the right side, above the right hip bone, once in the left side, and twice in the abdomen. Meany then ran down stairs, and Gibson followed. At the front door there was another scuffle, and Meany was thrown to the pavement. His head struck against the iron balustrades. Officer Curran arrived at this moment and arrested both men. They were taken from the Church street police station to the Chambers Street Hospital. Gibson's wounds are serious. Meany suffered a compound fracture of the frontal bone above the right eye. Meany was committed yesterday by Justice Otterbourg.

Carrying Whiskey to Prisoners.

Warden Fitzsimmons of the Ludlow street jail caused the arrest, yesterday, of Michael McCarthy, on a charge of taking whiskey into the prison. The offence is punishable with imprisonment for one year. Warden Fitzsimmons told Justice Morgan that there are in the prison four counterfeiters, Hickey, Ryan, Mayer, and McCarthy, who have influential friends, and who obtain permission for visitors to see them through passes granted by the United States Marshal. The Warden said that the keepers frequently complained to him that whiskey was carried to the prisoners, or passed to them through the open windows, and he then had the windows fastened down. The friends of the prisoners complained that the men were suffering for want of air, and the Warden was ordered to open the windows. On the day on which the windows were reopened the prisoners had many visitors, and at night they were very drunk. This alarmed Samuel Hermann, a German, and when Keeper Reilly interfered they beat him.

The Warden said that while he was in the office, yesterday, he saw Michael McCarthy enter with some trousers, and noticed that he had something bulky in his pocket. It was a bottle of whiskey. McCarthy was held for trial.
