THE LOUNSBURY TRAGEDY.

MRS. LOUNSBURY TRIED FOR THE MURDER OF HER HUSBAND.

The State's Attorney Testifying in her Behalf —Acquitted on the Ground of Insanity and to be Sent to the Asylum for the Insane.

BRIDGEPORT, Oct. 31.—The trial of Mary E. Lounsbury, charged with murder in the first degree, in having fatally shot her husband, the Rev. D. L. Lounsbury, at the parsonage of the Episcopal church in Stratford, on the 24th of last September, was begun and concluded in the Superior Court to-day. It resulted, as was expected, in a verdict of acquittal on the ground of insanity. In fact, there is some surprise that State Attorney Olmstead should have gone through with the formality of a trial, as he was convinced, from the reports of the physicians whom he employed to examine the accused woman, that she was mentally irresponsible for the killing, and knew that the medical evidence at the trial would establish this. Having no desire on this account to see the prisoner convicted, he worked in accord with her own counsel to secure her acquittal. Such a unanimous and harmonious pair of ostensibly opposing lawyers were probably never before seen in the trial of a capital case. Not only did the State Attorney conduct the examination of witnesses in the interest of Mrs. Lounsbury, but he went on the stand himself and testified in her behalf.

Mrs. Lounsbury came into the court room a few minutes before 10 o'clock, supported on either side by Mrs. Porter, who has been her nurse at the jail, and Deputy Sheriff Bertram. She was dressed in deep mourning, and only an indistinct view of her features could be obtained through her heavy crape veil. She walked feebly, and seemed wholly unconscious of the curious glances of the spectators. Her face was very pale, and her features drawn and listless. A sofa had been placed for her in front of the Judge's bench, and upon this she sank at full length. Turning her face to the back of the sofa, she closed her eyes, and during the rest of the morning apparently gave no heed to the proceedings. Before entering the court room, she had an affecting interview with her daughter, Annie, aged 11, who has been adopted since the tragedy by the Rev. Mr. Marks. The child, at the sight of her mother, rushed into her arms, and for several minutes the two stood clasped in each other's embrace, weeping convulsively, but not exchanging a word.

The selection of a jury occupied a few minutes, only twelve of the first thirteen names drawn out of the regular panel being accepted. This absence of challenges was another novel feature for a murder trial.

"She need not rise," said Judge Martin, when the Clerk of the Court, following the usual form, ordered the prisoner to stand up and listen to the reading of the indictment. She therefore heard it without changing her position or opening her eyes, and pleaded "Not guilty" in a voice hardly audible.

The State first called Mary Cummings, who was a domestic in the Lounsbury family at the time of the tragedy. She was awakened just after daylight by what sounded like a fall. She heard Mrs. Lounsbury rap on the door, calling to her to open it. On opening the door, Mrs. Lounsbury placed her hands on the witness's shoulders and said, "I have killed my husband," and repeated the same, her eyes all the time rolling wildly. Witness went down and and shook Mr. Lounsbury. Then she went for the doctor, who came in two or three minutes. He examined Mr. Lounsbury and pronounced him dead. Mrs. Lounsbury was walking back and forth, crying and shouting, saying she was willing to go to her death, and did not want to live. Witness saw a pistol on the bureau, which Mrs. Lounsbury said she had bought for protection against burglars. Mr. Lounsbury lay as though asleep. The bed clothes were undisturbed.

Annie May Lounsbury, 11 years old, a daughter of the prisoner, testified that she was awakened by the report of the pistol and went down stairs into her father's room. When Mary said, "He is not dead," her mother replied, "Yes, he is; it killed him the first thing; I saw it flash." At about 5 or 6 o'clock on the previous evening, heard father say he wanted mother to wear a supporter. She replied that she would not; and he said if she did not he would turn her out of house and home.

Mrs. Longstreet Porter testified that she had been in attendance upon Mrs. Lounsbury since the day of the murder. Mrs. Lounsbury had said repeatedly that she was not conscious of anything connected with the shooting until the flash of the pistol roused her to herself, realizing then what she had done, she was horrified and frightened. Mrs. Lounsbury said an angel appeared to her in the night, and she thought at the time that the Lord had sent a messenger to comfort her in her sufferings. Before the appearance of this vision, she had a foreboding that some calamity was about to befall her.

The cross-examination brought out the fact that Mrs. Lounsbury had been a great sufferer, mentally and physically, for fifteen years, and during the past five or six years had been confined most of the time to her bed. Her mind had become affected by her sufferings, and she was frequently told of doing and saying things she had no remembrance of. The pistol she killed her husband with, she bought with some intention of using upon herself. Once she had tried to commit suicide by laudanum, but failed through taking too much.

Dr. A. S. Allen testified that he saw the victim soon after his death. The wound was an inch below and to the left of the occipital protuberance. Death was instantaneous. A probe five or six inches length did not reach the ball.

State Attorney Olmstead said that it was only necessary for the prosecution to prove the fact of killing. Several physicians had visited the prisoner, at his request, and were at the service of the defense.

The defence then called Drs. C. E. Sanford, Robert Hubbard, Robert Leander, and Pliny Jewell. All agreed in describing Mrs. Lounsbury as the subject of certain physical ailments which at certain periods rendered her liable to nervous attacks, subversing the reason and making her irresponsible for her actions. From their examinations of the prisoner, they had no doubt she was in this condition when she shot her husband.

State Attorney Olmstead testified that he had visited Mrs. Lounsbury at the request of her relatives. In reply to defence, he said that Mrs. Lounsbury's condition was so changed that he deemed it his duty to send medical experts to examine into her mental condition.

The case was submitted without argument, and Judge Martin delivered a brief charge to the jury, instructing them to acquit the prisoner on the ground of insanity, provided they found she was not criminally responsible for her acts at the time of the shooting. The jury were out just fifteen minutes. When they came in and announced that they had agreed, the clerk gave the customary order for the prisoner and the foreman to look upon each other while the verdict was being pronounced. It is also customary for the prisoner to rise, but this was not required of Mrs. Lounsbury, as she seemed hardly equal to the exertion. In order that she might look upon the foreman the Sheriff raised her veil, which she had hitherto kept down. Even then she and the foreman were looking at right angles from each other, but Mrs. Lounsbury did no more to change her position. She heard the foreman say, "Not guilty, on the ground of insanity," without a motion or any perceptible change of countenance. She lay like a statue, wearing the flat-land expression look she had worn all day. The attendants at once wheeled the sofa into the next room, and the prisoner was assisted down stairs and driven back to jail. Under the verdict she will be committed to the State Retreat for the Insane.

HANLAN AND COURTNEY.

A Proposal in View of the Fact that Neither Can Touch that $6,000.

Mr. William Blaikie, the referee in the recent race between Courtney and Hanlan, has mailed the following:

NEW YORK, Oct. 31, 1879.

Mr. Edward Hanlan, 103 Beekman street, Toronto, Ontario.

MY DEAR SIR: Why is not the race a good way to do? You and Mr. Courtney have deposited $2,500 each with the Cashier of the First National Bank of Washington to cover the stakes. If he is ready to pay your $500 to Mr. Courtney if you do not start in the proposed race, let Mr. Courtney at the same time also write him to pay you his (Courtney's) $500 in case he fails to start.

This will provide for the expenses of each from now till the time of the race, and will save the man who is then ready from losing out of pocket.

Secondly, you execute a short agreement with the donors of the purse that, from the time of the start in the proposed race, you will waive all claim to the $6,000, and will consent that it go to the winner of the new contest.

This will at once relieve you of any imputation of meaning, in case you should lose in the new race, to still claim the money under the old one. I will write Mr. Courtney today, sending him the duplicate of this as above, and laying before him this second proposition also.

Then, if you and he, or your friends as relatives would at once meet the donors, I little doubt that they will aid, as far as they can, in placing the prize so that the new winner may be sure of it.

Mr. Keene's Change of Base.

Spendthrift, Lord Murphy, Dan Sparling, Miser, Dave Moore, Florence H., and the yearlings Mr. James R. Keene purchased in Kentucky and Tennessee last May and June are to be watched at the Pennsylvania Farm, adjoining Major A. T. Thomson's place, on the North Elkhorn, Ky. Nov. 1 Mr. Keene's horses are now in Kentucky, and will be trained through the winter. This may give them a better chance with Eastern horses next spring and summer.

Moss-bunker Fisheries in New Jersey.

The moss-bunker fisheries of Port Monmouth, N. J., have just closed, and the season has been very successful. Over 25,000,000 fish have been taken. The oil alone from them yields two thousand tuns, and the scraps yield two thousand tuns of fish. The oil sells readily at 35c. per tun, and is used as a fertilizer.

Archbishop Purcell's Assignment.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 31.—Judge Harmon of the Superior Court is to make a decision sustaining the validity of the assignment by Archbishop Purcell of a number of pieces of property in trust for payment of his debts, as against an attachment by the 20th Ward National Bank of Steubenville for a debt of the Archbishop.

BOTH SEEKING DIVORCE.

The Story of an Irish Girl who was Married to her Father's Coachman.

Bernard Smith, a barroom keeper at 327 Market street, Newark, N. J., was formerly a coachman in the service of Chidley Coote Barnes, Esq., a police magistrate and wealthy farmer in the county Meath, Ireland, whose only daughter, Eliza J. Barnes, he married. Mr. Barnes expected to give his daughter in marriage to the son of a neighboring gentleman, but the intended bridegroom died before this hope was fulfilled. Nine years ago the brothers and friends of Miss Barnes, who was then only 18 years of age, were grieved by her marriage to Bernard Smith, the coachman, who was 24 years of age and rather good looking, but uneducated. The young couple were privately married by a registrar in Dublin, where they lived in seclusion for a few months. Then they emigrated to the United States. They settled in Newark, where Smith procured employment as hostler for a wealthy wholesale ale and liquor dealer. Subsequently he opened a barroom and boarding house, in which business he has been engaged ever since. The marriage proved unhappy, and in July last they both applied to the New Jersey Chancery Court for divorce on mutual allegations of infidelity. Mrs. Smith also applied for alimony and the custody of her only child, who is now, by direction of the Court, under charge of a third party. Testimony in all the suits was taken before Vice-Chancellor Van Fleet in Newark yesterday.

"My father was a civil and police magistrate," said Mrs. Smith to a reporter for THE SUN last evening, "and he was highly respected in the County Meath and in the city of Dublin. Besides his own entailed property, at Manorstown, he managed two estates at Newcastle and Turkstown, near Dublin. Every year he and my mother spent several months in London, Scotland, and the South of Ireland, but they seldom took me with them in these excursions after I was ten years old. I had a governess, a dancing master, a music teacher, and an instructor in riding. I could follow the hounds across fields, hedges, and ditches with the best horseman in the county, but I was not permitted to attend public gatherings unless my brother went with me. I had four brothers—Chidley Coote, Richard Adolphus, Caleb Chidley Coote, and Chidley. The two eldest are dead, and the two youngest are now agents for large estates near Dublin. Caleb Chidley now manages, I am told, an estate for the Marquis of Headford. Richard Adolphus was cashier of the Hibernia Bank, and Chidley has my father's estate.

"When I was 14 years old Bernard Smith, a likely lad, was taken into my father's service as coachman, groom, and fancy gardener. He was very kind and attentive to me, and after my father and mother died I was thrown very much in his company, because my brothers were at college. One attended Anglesea School, in England, and another was graduating at Ballinasloe College. My eldest brother did not give up much of his time to me, and I was therefore permitted to follow my own inclinations. Bernard Smith used to drive me out in the fancy carriage whenever I cared about taking an airing, and he also rode beside me when I went out for a canter with my saddle horse. Then I was fond of directing him in the garden. We were both young, and I was an innocent country girl, knew nothing about the world, and had little company at our house. I became fond of the coachman, and finally we consented to elope. I went to Dublin on a morning train. He followed in the afternoon. We expected to get married at once, but no priest would perform the ceremony, because Smith was a Roman Catholic and I an Episcopalian. Therefore we had to give twenty-one days notice to a Registrar in Dublin, and during that long wait we lived in out of the way apartments in Dublin. My brothers and friends were very angry when they learned that I had married our coachman. I was afraid to meet my brothers, for I feared they would shoot me or Smith, they were so angry. Therefore, four months after our marriage, Smith and I took passage for America. I said my mother's and my own jewelry to get money. I was not an hour married until I was sorry for what I had done, but I was afraid to go back to my brothers. My life in Newark has not been pleasant. Every year since I left Ireland my brothers have sent me the interest on my mother's marriage settlement, and a few months ago the lawyers sent me $650, which they said was the last I would get. My brothers and my relatives have my father's property, but they would not help me when I lived with Mr. Smith.

"Mr. Smith said that he did not elope with his wife because he thought they were openly married in Dublin. Her father's family was, he said, an old an honored one, but they were now in reduced circumstances, but he thought they were very proud. Difference in their religion, he said, had caused much of their trouble.

ITALIAN CHILDREN TAUGHT.

Opportunity for those whose Days are Spent in Earning a Livelihood.

The Italian children who live in Sullivan street, Thompson street, South Fifth avenue, West Broadway, and thereabouts, and who are occupied every day in earning their living, have an opportunity, free of cost, of learning to read and write English, and to study arithmetic and geography in the school that has been opened in Sullivan street, one door above Grand. Three pleasant stories in a newly finished building have been rented by the Children's Aid Society which has maintained a free Italian school in Leonard street for twenty-five years, and which opened a second in Crosby street three years ago. A teacher who has been employed nine years in the Leonard street school, Mrs. Alleyn, is charged with making the new school in Sullivan street successful. The school hours are from 3 until 6, and from 4 until 7 P. M.

The basement is occupied by the janitor's family, and it is the large toilet room of the children. The smallest of which are well washed by the janitress before they go up into the schoolrooms. The little bootblacks drop in at any time between 3 and 6 o'clock, whenever their outdoor avocation permits. The first story above the basement had, last evening, about fifty pupils of Italian descent, girls, from 7 to 22 years of age. One of them, with tapering fingers and a wealth of auburn hair, is "forelady" in a manufactory of ladies' invisible hair nets. Another, who has an ambition to make her education compare with her personal beauty, works during the day at preparing the chocolate sweetmeats of Maillard's establishment uptown. Nearly all in this room were Genoese, and among them a considerable sprinkling of air hair and blue eyes.

The second story above the basement had, last evening, about fifty pupils of a younger and generally less advanced grade; all boys but two, and nearly all bootblacks. Under the eye of an experienced teacher, Miss Lane, they were copying, each on his slate, the lessons written in large characters upon the great blackboard.

The whole school is a transplant from Naples and Genoa. From other cities of Italy there are none; and the juvenile patriots keep up the local traditions, and clan together according to their native cities.

Mrs. Alleyn finds the Italian children generally bright, particularly at numbers. The hope in establishing this school was to draw in the street musicians, many of whom live in this neighborhood, and all the children of poor Italians, the peripatetic musicians are the most unwilling to attend the schools. They seem to be a caste by themselves, as the stage artists of a higher grade are, and are as shy also of being personally mixed with that public which is to them so familiar.
