FIVE DAYS IN A JURY ROOM.

SHOWING THE IMPORTANCE OF SELECTING A JURY WITH CARE.

Two Jurymen who Would Have Voted Guilty Induced to Vote Not Guilty—Using a Page of the Bible as a Tally-score at Cards.

From the Philadelphia Times.

The jury to whom Judge Briggs, at half-past 8 o'clock last Saturday evening, committed the fate of William Rusk, who was tried on the charge of killing David McCool, returned to the court room at a quarter of 12 o'clock yesterday, with a verdict of "not guilty." They had been out for nearly five days. The prisoner was discharged.

The jury that acquitted Rusk was composed of George Dessoe, the foreman, driver, 37 Washington avenue; Thomas Richardson, merchant, Chelten avenue and Clow streets, Germantown; William Thomas, tobacconist, 43 Poplar street; Robert Pentland, printer, 838 Suffolk street; Peter Leary, bricklayer, Robinson street, Manayunk; George Cottman, saw grinder, 172 Laurel street; Benjamin F. Fox, bricklayer, 318 East Venango street; George W. Lentz, butcher, 1,546 East Montgomery avenue; S. H. Brooks, conductor, 2,639 Percelain street; Lindsey Evans (colored), waiter, Tenor place, west from 416 South Fifth street; G. W. Rawlings, printer, 412 South Fifth street, and J. G. Ledyard, photographer, 1,029 Mount Vernon street.

Mr. Pentland says that Mr. Richardson, Mr. Ledyard, Mr. Evans, and himself were at first in favor of a verdict of manslaughter, but the four gradually dwindled down until yesterday, when Mr. Pentland stood alone on the side for the conviction of the prisoner. His final consent to say "not guilty," despite his belief of Rusk's guilt, Mr. Pentland explains by saying that yesterday morning found him suffering very much from headache and the effects of confinement, and, seeing that further holding out against the eleven would be useless, he took the step that gave him fresh air and liberty.

"We have had a remarkable time," added Mr. Pentland. "And I would not go through it again for one hundred dollars cash in advance. The devices of the jurors to relieve the dreadful monotony were innumerable, and many of them as worthy of note as are the sayings of some of the men. Listen, and I'll read to you from my note book.

"On Thursday night, before all the evidence was in, Leary said, in presence of all hands, 'Damned if I can see that the man is guilty.' I told him that he ought not to express an opinion upon the matter until all the testimony should be in.

"A plumber's lamp, full of alcohol, was found in the jury room on Friday afternoon. Fox, known as 'the jolly man' of the party, couldn't resist the temptation to taste the alcohol. Cottman, whom we always called 'the fat man,' poured some into a glass, but as soon as it reached his lips he turned up his nose and handed it to Fox, who swallowed it with relish in sips. Cottman then tried it again, but with no better success. Bright and early Saturday morning Fox was at the lamp again for another nip. He jocularly expressed fears that the lamp wouldn't hold out, and he said that he wouldn't advise any of the other fellows to drink. He left the lamp away securely, as he thought, but when he came at noon for another 'pull,' he found the lamp empty.

"The first vote was taken at 9 o'clock Saturday evening on the question of whether the prisoner was guilty of either the first or the second degree of murder, or of manslaughter. Nine jurors voted 'not guilty,' and Richardson, Ledyard and myself were for manslaughter. Before midnight we agreed unanimously to vote upon the question of manslaughter. Eight said 'not guilty' and four 'guilty.' Evans, the colored juror, having conversed to me, he went back next day, however, when a vote resulted in nine for acquittal and three for conviction. A repetition of the balloting later in the day found no change.

"Fox, 'the jolly man,' started a burlesque prayer meeting on Sunday afternoon, which evoked expressions of disapproval from Richardson and Evans, and I was disgusted also. With eight mirthful jurors seated around him Fox performed all sorts of negro camp meeting antics, leaping, clapping his hands and knees and shouting as if he might shake his himself apart. Meanwhile, suiting words to action, he would sing, with mock piety, such ditties as

> There great big crows sat on a tree,
> And they were black as crows could be.
> Sing, brothers, sing!

"The 'brothers' would join heartily in the chorus, while the jolly man's voice also all the rest. When they thought that they had given sufficient musical expression to their Sabbath devotions they spent the rest of the afternoon in spinning yarns, many of which were of a character by no means edifying.

"Two ballots were taken on Monday, with the previous result of three jurors differing out over thirty-six hours. Dessoe, the foreman, told me that he had not formed any opinion at all, and yet he had voted four times for acquittal. It seemed to some of us that Dessoe had no opinions, but merely wished to go with the majority. He spoke of the time in learning to write from copies that I set for him. He could barely scribble his name.

"Among the events to relieve the monotony of Monday was the mysterious disappearance of the colored juror's pocket book. It contained only three cents in cash, but had in it a number of recommendations from former employers, and to these papers Evans attached much value. A juror offered to inform the Judge of the matter, but Evans was unwilling. The property has not yet been found.

"Thursday night the janitor of the association that supplies hotel apartments, jury rooms, and such places with copies of Holy Writ (free of charge) was appreciated by Cottman on Monday evening, when he used a page of the first chapter of St. Luke for a tally score in a game of euchre with Fox and myself.

"Ledyard weakened on Tuesday morning, leaving Richardson and myself the only jurors in favor of conviction. Three other ballotings were had that day, but without making a change. On Wednesday Richardson seemed to think that there was no use holding out any longer. He was tired and disgusted. In the afternoon after the Judge had refused to permit cigars to be brought to Richardson from his store on North Fifth street, he spoke to me of the advisability of both of us going over to the majority. I doubted, some time afterward, on the same day, Thomas was tired to induce me to go over. I suppose he had observed me taking notes every day, and said to me: 'I'll do what I can to help you make up an article for any of the newspapers, or I'll do anything else in my power to help you.' Thomas also compared the impression of our conversation at that time that he had expected that he would 'get on this case.' Went to meant further than have me 'go over' and let the jury be free I cannot say.

"Richardson persisted in his efforts to convince me that we ought to go over and get out of this misery, and finally, near sunset Saturday, I yielded, for the reasons which I have already given. I was not only sick from confinement but disgusted beyond measure at the rudeness, vulgarity, and disagreeable habits of some of the jurymen. There were men there who seemed to forget that for a short time period, as long as they would receive their $2.50 a day and board out, under the circumstances I could not feel that way.

"By the way, there's something which ought to be brought to the attention of the courts—the shameful condition of the walls of the sleeping apartments. They are literally covered with scribbling, drawings, caricatures, and other pictures, a few of which, it is true, are open to no other objection than that of marring the appearance of the rooms, but the majority of them bring off the most indecent description. Notwithstanding the vile character of these things their jurymen authors, in many instances, do not appear to have been ashamed of them, for they have left their signatures along with them."

COMPLAINTS FROM THE STEERAGE.

The Fourth Officer of the France Put Under Arrest for Drunkenness.

The Castle Garden Committee of the Commissioners of Emigration heard George Barker's charges, yesterday, in relation to the management of the steerage of the steamship France. Barker and his wife and four children were passengers in the steerage of the France on her latest voyage to this port. He testified that the salt meat given the steerage passengers was of inferior quality and not fit to eat; that fresh meat was given only three times during a voyage of eighteen days, whereas the steerage ticket contract calls for five fresh meat rations a week; and that the fourth officer got drunk and abused the steerage passengers, and threatened to murder them and throw into the ship.

Robert J. Fletcher of 207 North Second street, Brooklyn, and Alfred Tucker of 814 Broadway, Brooklyn, also steerage passengers in the France, corroborated Barker's testimony.

Capt. John Robinson of the France put in a general denial, except as to the fourth officer's intoxication. He promptly put the officer under arrest, and released him only on conditions of his quitting the company's service. For Captain offered a statement, signed by thirty-six other steerage passengers, expressing satisfaction with their treatment, and the statement of the steward, to the effect that the food was the best in the market, "extra food liberally," that fresh meat was served every other day; and that especial care was shown and rations given to the women and children, and especially to Barker's family.

Burglar Captured.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., Nov. 7.—John Sawyer, one of the three burglars concerned in the robbing of Sanford Hoagle's house in Wantage Township, Sussex County, N. J., and who escaped after his arrest, was captured last night at Otisville, being taken from the New Jersey Midland train on which he had gone as far as a ride toward Jersey City. He offered a substitute with a revolver, but was overcome by the constable, and handed to a telegraph lineman in charge. Sawyer was committed to Newton jail, where his two accomplices are.

Sixty Miles of Freight Cars.

More freight was carried over the New York, Lake Erie, and Western Railroad than in any previous week on that road. Between Hinsdale and New York on Saturday sixty miles of heavily laden eastern bound freight cars were in motion at one time.

INDIGNANT MR. FROST.

The Congressional Committee Adjourns the Ocean Bank Inquiry to Washington.

All of the witnesses heretofore examined by the Congressional Committee in the investigation of the affairs of the Ocean National Bank, and the charges against the receiver, Theodore M. Davis, have named Charles L. Frost as the source of their information. Mr. Frost was, therefore, summoned by the Committee, and he appeared yesterday morning. He is a portly, ruddy-faced man, with white bushy hair, side whiskers and imperial.

Mr. Frost began by addressing the Committee in an excited manner, saying that it looked as though hush money had been paid to keep some of the witnesses out of the way; that his character had been impeached by statements that he was not a man of veracity; and that he would not testify until he had an opportunity to purge himself of the imputation put upon him by Judge Choate upon the occasion of deciding that the receiver should go on and sell certain assets of the bank. He wanted to refute the charge that he was particeps criminis with Mr. Davis. He admitted that he had bought some of the assets of the Ocean Bank from Mr. Davis; but he had obtained them, he said, as a merchant and not as a thief. "I have been President," said Mr. Frost, "of eight railroads; and yet Judge Choate says that all suspicion against the receiver appears to rest almost exclusively upon my affidavit, and that, so far as appears upon the record, I am not entitled to credit! That was an arrangement procured by this man Davis and his lawyer for the purpose of demeaning me."

The Chairman of the Committee, Mr. Buckner, said that the Committee could not prolong their stay, but they would like to hear Mr. Frost, if he was prepared to substantiate his charges against the receiver.

"I shall require that the Committee summon every bank President and Insurance President and every rich owner of real estate in the city to testify to my character. I never had any notice of this investigation. Those stockholders wanted me to help them to pursue this man Davis, and I did so. I never knew anything about the article in THE SUN of June 22, 1879," Mr. Frost replied.

"We hope the Committee will examine Mr. Frost now," said Mr. Parsons. "He has made certain accusations against Mr. Davis, and he ought to be prepared to substantiate them now."

"I am not, sir," said Mr. Frost stiffly.

"Are there any facts different from what Mr. Frost has already sworn to?" Mr. Buckner asked.

"An ex-parte written statement is one thing, and testimony under oath and under cross-examination by us is quite another," Mr. Parsons replied. "We want Mr. Frost to make his charges before the Committee, and give us a chance to cross-examine him."

"I won't give any evidence until I am purged of the imputation put on my character by Judge Choate," said Mr. Frost in a loud tone; "and I won't give it without you put me in prison and keep me there on bread and water."

"If Mr. Frost dares to make his charges here, we want an opportunity to cross-examine him," said Mr. Parsons. "The Committee can see that the authorship of every charge against Mr. Davis has been traced to Mr. Frost."

"We will see whether it rests entirely upon me," exclaimed Mr. Frost.

The matter was dropped for a short time, while the testimony of the Hon. Benjamin Dean and Wm. H. Morrell was taken. They were both positive that there was no collusion in the sale of the bonds under the order of Judge Choate, but that there was an honest and fair effort to get the highest price for the benefit of the creditors of the bank. Mr. Morrell admitted that he had obtained an option to sell one lot that had been bid in for $20,000, which he thought was worth $100,000, but, after trying all he could, he failed to obtain a higher price.

Mr. Parsons then renewed his effort to have Mr. Frost sworn, and Mr. Frost renewed his indignant denial of the imputations that he considered had been cast upon him by Judge Choate. But he wanted time to collect his papers and to get counsel, and then he would willingly appear and testify. The Chairman of the Committee thought that Mr. Frost should have time to prepare.

Mr. Parsons said: "It is evident that Mr. Frost does not dare to testify here."

"What's that? What's that?" shouted Mr. Frost. "Don't dare!"

"No, sir; you do not dare," repeated Mr. Parsons.

"Don't dare? I'll show you whether I don't dare," retorted Mr. Frost angrily. "I don't want any man to dare me. You will find that I dare anything."

The Committee adjourned to meet in Washington on Dec. 10, Mr. Frost promising to go there at his own expense and testify against Mr. Davis.

In the reports of Wednesday's proceedings, Mr. Goldsmith, a witness, was made to say that after the shares of the Lake Superior stock had been sold at $20 per share, the rest of the stock was sold at $10. Mr. Howe, counsel for Mr. Davis, says that the witness testified that the second sale was for $20 per share.

THE M'AULIFFE WIFE KILLING.

Verdict of Manslaughter—Sentenced to Three Years in the State Prison.

BRIDGEPORT, Nov. 7.—At the opening of court in the M'Auliffe case this morning the State Attorney said that from the evidence, he would not ask a verdict of murder in the first or second degree, and that he had agreed with the counsel for the defence to accept a verdict of manslaughter, which, under the direction of the Court, was given. The prisoner then made a statement of the circumstances attending his crime. He said he had risen at about 9½ A. M. Mrs. M'Auliffe was getting breakfast he had fixed the stove pipe, handling a knife in the operation. He threw the knife on the table, and soon engaged in an altercation with his wife, in the course of which he pushed her to the floor. He could not tell whether she had the knife in her hand or not. She arose, and he went out and did his work until afternoon. His wife was then on the floor in the bedroom, but he did not go in to see her. The boy reported her as bleeding, but supposed it was from some trifling injury, such as he frequently received by persons intoxicated. He went home at about half-past four and found her return. He had lived here twenty years, and was never before arrested. The Court sentenced him to three years in the State prison and $1 fine.

Killing her Husband with an Axe.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 7.—Near Buffalo City, Baxter County, S. D. Phillips was murdered by his wife Sarah, according to her own confession. The weapon used was an axe. She said she had been badly treated for two years by him, and long harbored the purpose to be revenged. On Saturday night last she waited until her husband was asleep, and then dealt him repeated blows with the axe on the head and body. Four or five wounds were found in the depth of four inches on the head, and many more on the breast, some of them reaching the heart. Part of the right hand was cut off, and there was a wound in the abdomen from which a part of the bowels protruded. She drag the body into the front yard, and then, after trying to wash out some of the blood, went out to alert in the same bed where her husband had fallen. There she was discovered. Pieces of the skull were found on the bed, and some blood stained clothing under the sheets.

The Rev. Matthew Hale Smith's Death.

The Rev. Matthew Hale Smith, well known as an author and newspaper correspondent, whose noon-day prayer meeting "Burleigh," died of pneumonia in his house at 211 Ninth street, Brooklyn, yesterday. He had been active in the political canvass, and had made a number of speeches at the request of the Republican State Committee. Two weeks ago, the day after he had addressed a mass meeting in one of the county towns, he was seized with a chill in his office in this city, and was taken to his home. He was enfeebled by age and overwork, and could not resist the attack of pneumonia that followed. He was 63 years of age. After he ceased to be an active pastor he wrote a number of books on the lights and shadows of New York life, and on Wall street. He leaves a wife and two daughters.

Mathew Smell's Singular Fall.

A passenger in an up bound train on the elevated railroad in Ninth avenue that reached Fifteenth street at 8:20 on Thursday evening, told the gateman that a mail bag had fallen from the train to the street. The gateman found a man lying in the street. The injured man said he was Mathew Smell, 63 years old, and that he lived at Eighth avenue and Eighty-first street, and he could give no account of his fall. He said that the last he remembered was that he was sitting in one of the cars. He suffered fractures of four ribs, right arm and left thigh, and his recovery is doubtful. The medical attendant said that he was not under the influence of liquor when he arrived at the hospital. An employee of the road said that Smell got out of the car apparently half asleep, and that in trying to get back into the car after the train was in motion he fell.

John Irving's Second Attempt to Escape.

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 7.—John Irving, who escaped, with William O'Brien, alias Porter, from Raymond street jail, Brooklyn, in June last, and who was arrested here on Sunday for burglary, made a bold attempt to escape this morning. When brought from the jail to the new Court House, he asked permission to retire to a closet. Soon after his return he made a similar request, and as the officer had suspicion, an investigation was made. The bricks in one corner of the enclosure were found to be removed, leaving an aperture two feet high and one foot wide. This would have enabled him to escape if it had not been discovered. Irving was at once taken to the prisoners' dock. He pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to three years and one month in the penitentiary.

A Head Split Open with a Shovel.

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 7.—In Carondelet, six miles below here, yesterday, a very brutal fight occurred between Henry Freund and Patrick Gallagher, two workmen in the Missouri Steel furnace, in which Freund's head was split open with a shovel. The wound resulting in his death last evening. Gallagher, who was also badly injured, is now in jail. There had been a quarrel of several months' standing between the two men.
