Unprofitable Economy.

Congressman Loud, of California, is actively pushing his pet measure—the bill to alter the present laws relating to second-class mail matter. This bill failed of passage at the last session in congress, and it is to be hoped that it will again meet a like fate. The bill places a host of restrictions on publishers, and practically leaves them at the mercy of the postmaster-general's whim. Under its provisions the cheap paper editions of Dickens, Scott and other standard authors must advance in price, as the publishers of such works will be debarred from sending them through the mails at the present rate of postage, one cent per pound. Instead, they will be mailable at eight cents per pound, which, as these books frequently weigh as much as a pound, will advance prices to the public to that extent. If Mr. Loud should devote his energies to reducing the exorbitant rates now paid to the railroads by the government for the transportation of mails, he would speedily transform the annual deficiency in the postal department to a surplus. If you are opposed to Mr. Loud's bill, send our congressman and senators a postal card, and let them know it.
