MR. REAGAN'S HUMILIATION.

A BAD MATTER MADE WORSE BY AN EXPLANATION IN THE HOUSE.

Answers to his Averments by Speaker Randall and Mr. McLane—The Member's Accusations Said to Have Been Without Truth.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24.—Seldom if ever has a member of the House, in attempting to make a personal explanation, met such humiliating treatment as befel Congressman Reagan of Texas to-day. On the 12th of February THE SUN published a despatch from Washington relating the story of Mr. Reagan's peculiar actions before the Committee on Commerce, of which he is Chairman, when that committee refused to allow him to report his Inter-State Commerce bill. In an interview which was published the day after the committee took this action, Mr. Reagan said that the committee had been originally "stocked" to defeat this bill. In conversations with members of the committee, THE SUN correspondent learned that Mr. Reagan had used substantially this language in the presence of the committee, and that he had been rebuked promptly for his unwarrantable language. Upon being taken to task for his utterances, Mr. Reagan apologized, and said that he did not mean what he said. THE SUN correspondent was informed upon the best authority that the Speaker, having seen the published interview in which Mr. Reagan charged that the committee had been stocked by Mr. Randall to defeat his bill, called upon Mr. Reagan and demanded a retraction of the statement. The next day Mr. Reagan published a card substantially admitting that he had said the committee had been stocked to defeat his bill, but denying that he intended any imputation upon the Speaker. He said that he thought the Speaker had been unwittingly led to the formation of a committee which would beat his bill. Although Mr. Reagan's card was unsatisfactory to the members of the committee, no further attention was paid by them to it. Individual members of the committee, however, considered the propriety of censuring Mr. Reagan for his insult to the committee.

THE SUN's despatch was copied into a Texas newspaper, and this morning Mr. Reagan rose to a personal explanation thereon. He charged that the despatch was a gross perversion of truth, that brought odium upon himself, and he denied that he was ever rebuked by his committee—a statement which was not made by THE SUN. He declared that the Speaker had not demanded a retraction of him, and that the members of the committee had not deliberated upon the propriety of censuring him. In conclusion he alleged that the object of THE SUN's despatch was to defeat his bill.

Speaker Randall quit the chair while Mr. Reagan was talking. At the conclusion of Mr. Reagan's remarks he said that on the morning of the publication of Mr. Reagan's interview his attention was called to the matter. He felt indignant that he should be charged with having stocked a committee of the House. He saw Mr. Reagan immediately, and conferred with him, and Mr. Reagan promised that an explanation should be made. The explanation was made. There was no menace on the Speaker's part. The statement alleged to have been made by Mr. Reagan was a wicked and a serious one, and he (the Speaker) wanted to say to the House that there was not a scintilla of truth in it. He had not thought when he appointed the committee of what legislation was to come before it; and he wanted to say that the statements as had been made were wickedly and maliciously untrue, so far as his action was concerned.

Mr. Reagan, who had been nervously fidgetting in his seat while the Speaker was talking, said that there was no occasion for the Speaker to use such language in denying his connection with the matter.

Mr. Randall—My remarks concerned the article printed.

Mr. Waite said that he knew of no movement on the part of the committee to censure the Chairman.

Mr. McLane denounced Mr. Reagan and his conduct before the committee, saying that Mr. Reagan had used language before the committee substantially as reported, but he had also disclaimed before the committee any intention of insulting the Speaker or the members of the committee. Mr. Reagan's disclaimer was accepted by the committee. He (Mr. McLane) could not see how the Chairman of the committee could use the language he did without reflecting upon the committee, but his explanation was satisfactory.

Mr. Reagan—I said that the committee was so constituted as to defeat the reporting of the bill. Those who felt that I intended any reflection do so for themselves. I intended no insult. My statement was that the Speaker was induced to constitute the committee, outside of his own knowledge, to defeat the bill. I may have been betrayed into the use of strong expressions by my earnestness. The Speaker had always been in favor of the bill, and if he constituted the committee wrongly it was done unknown to himself.

Mr. McLane, after this interruption, continued his speech: "When the member says that the committee was stocked by the Speaker——"

"I never said by the Speaker," shouted Mr. Reagan.

"Very well," exclaimed Mr. McLane; "he may or may not have used the word. I will accept his disclaimer. Who but the Speaker constitutes committees?"

Mr. McLane thought that the Chairman had been led to make the offensive remark because he was moved and excited by the defeat of his bill. There was no doubt that he had said the committee had been stocked to defeat his bill, and it was not strange that the remark had been considered by the Speaker and the members of the committee as a reflection upon them. Perhaps no member need have taken offense, but among gentlemen such language could not be used. The gentleman's utterances were susceptible of the construction that the committee had been stocked for an improper purpose. Such language could not be accepted, and the gentleman should not have used language which could be misunderstood. Not only was the language used unjustifiable, no matter whether the gentleman was angry or not, but it was language unfit to be used under any circumstances. Mr. McLane said that originally it had been intended to report Mr. Reagan's bill from the committee, but, after the extended hearing upon the subject, it was decided the bill should not be reported. Returning again to Mr. Reagan's statements, Mr. McLane said that he did not believe the gentleman could maintain gentlemanly relations in the House or elsewhere if he used such language.

Mr. Reagan retorted that Mr. McLane was evidently determined not to be satisfied. His statements were unfair. After a short speech by Mr. Kenna in Mr. Reagan's favor, the subject was dropped.

Asking for the Street Sweepings.

A deputation from the Farmers' Club called on Commissioner Nichols, who is Chairman of the Street Cleaning Committee, yesterday, to request him to hand over the street sweepings to them. Mr. Nichols replied that if they would furnish the boats to carry the sweepings away in, they might have all they wished. He hopes that the Dock Commissioners will adopt the plan of filling in the bulkheads on the piers, when the proposed extensions are made, with the accumulation of ashes, and in that case the problem before the Street Cleaning Department will have been temporarily disposed of.
