HOLDING COURT IN RIDLEY'S.

THE CHARGE MRS. MALLACH MAKES AGAINST POLICEMAN RALEIGH.

Complaining that She was Arrested, Imprisoned, Searched, and then Set Free by a Policeman, who Didn't even Take Her to a Police Station—Both Sides of the Story.

Mrs. Ann Mallach, the wife of a musician who resides at 125 East Thirteenth street, has preferred charges against Policeman John Raleigh for arresting and detaining her, by reason of a groundless suspicion, in the store of Edward Ridley & Sons, in Grand street. Upon the result of this trial will depend, it is said, her decision whether to bring suits to recover damages for the injuries arising from the unfortunate mistake of which she was the victim. Two weeks ago on Friday, Mrs. Mallach, who is a middle-aged lady of repectable appearance, was shopping in Ridley's store. She walked some distance into the store, and while there purchased a handkerchief. Something in her manner, of which she herself was unconscious, attracted the attention of a saleswoman behind one of the counters. Policeman John Raleigh was in the store at the time. He belongs to the New street station, but had been detailed to assist Inspector Murray, who assigned him to patrol duty in citizen's dress on Grand street, from Broadway to the river. Mr. Graff, who has a general supervision of what occurs on the first floor, was also there. The saleswoman pointed out Mrs. Mallach to Mr. Graff and told him she was acting queerly. This is the version of all except Mrs. Mallach, who denies that her behavior justified suspicion. Mr. Graff saw the policeman and asked him to watch Mrs. Mallach. A moment afterward the saleswoman told Mr. Graff that she was almost positive she saw Mrs. Mallach take a corset from a basketful of corsets near one of the front doors and pass into the street with it. Mr. Graff communicated this news to Policeman Raleigh and he slipped out and followed Mrs. Mallach along Grand street toward the Bowery. Mr. Graff followed the policeman. It is said that both these men saw Mrs. Mallach stoop, pick up a piece of paper from the sidewalk and wrap in it something that she took from under the voluminous blue cloak that she wore. Mr. Graff next saw Policeman Raleigh speak to the woman and she returned to the store with him. Mr. Graff again following at some distance.

The policeman and the customer went directly to the private office of Mr. Moore, the superintendent, and there her parcel and valise were searched. At this point the versions of the narration by the different parties diverge widely.

Mr. Graff says that he did not see Mrs. Mallach do anything strange in the store, but that when the saleswoman mentioned her suspicion he repeated it to Policeman Raleigh. When Mrs. Mallach left the store the policeman was in the middle of the store. Again the saleswoman spoke of the suspicion, saying that she was certain she had seen her take a corset. Again Mr. Graff says he informed the policeman. He says positively that he did not tell Raleigh to arrest Mrs. Mallach. He only repeated what the saleswoman said. Of his own accord Raleigh followed the customer, Mr. Graff says, while he followed Raleigh. When the policeman came back with Mrs. Mallach, Mr. Graff says he did not speak to the policeman. He did not tell him where to take her; he did not tell him to search her; in short, he left the policeman to act wholly upon his own judgment.

Mr. Graff says that the policeman took the customer into Mr. Moore's private office and there looked into her bundle and her valise. He says that Mrs. Mallach grew excited and insisted upon being searched and upon being arrested. She demanded to be taken to the station by a policeman. Policeman Raleigh showed her his shield and told her he was responsible for whatever he had done. He would not take her to the station.

Mr. Moore, the superintendent, said that he had investigated the matter, and that it was his opinion that no share of the responsibility for the unfortunate occurrence falls upon the firm through the acts of any employee. Policeman Raleigh is, as Mr. Moore says, the policeman has since admitted, solely responsible. The saleswoman simply mentioned her suspicion, the floor-walker echoed it to the policeman, and each one added subsequent information. It was a jointure, Mr. Moore thinks, when the policeman was called upon to decide promptly as to his duty and his powers. No one made a direct charge against the customer; no one asked to have her arrested. The policeman made the arrest, thinking, as he has since said to Mr. Moore, that it was clearly the thing to do.

Superintendent Moore says that he knew nothing of what was going on until he dropped into his private office as he does a hundred times a day. There he found the policeman and Mrs. Mallach, and he learned that there was no reason for detaining her. He had not authorized the intrusion by the policeman or the customer, and he asked them to withdraw. "I have dealt at Ridley's twenty years," said Mrs. Mallach yesterday. "I went there on the day of this occurrence to purchase some human hair. I had been to an auction in Canal street, and had purchased a lap robe for fifty cents. They did not wrap it up when they gave it to me. In Ridley's I did not go from counter to counter, but went a little way into the store before I perceived that it was too dark to match the hair with the sample I had brought. I bought a handkerchief for ten cents, gave a quarter of a dollar, received fifteen cents change, and started to go out. At the door were two boys. Their names are Nelson and Coburn. They were removing soiled paper from a window. I asked one of them to give me a piece large enough to cover the robe I bought in the auction store. They told me to take as much as I needed. I took what I wanted and walked out. I turned the first corner, in order to leave the throng of people, and put my satchel down with safety while I wrapped up my bundle. Soon afterward, when I had gone perhaps two blocks from the store, a man tapped me on the shoulder.

"'Were you not in Ridley's?' he asked.

"'Yes,' I said.

"'Well, come back there,' said he; 'you have left something.'

"Supposing that I might have left my handkerchief or purse, or something, I went back. When I got in the store, Mr. Graff said something about searching me. The man who had tapped me on the shoulder, Policeman Raleigh, took away my valise, my bundle, and everything I had, and then for the first time I realized that I was a prisoner. I was taken through the store, and one of the men asked a young woman behind the counter if I was the woman. I understood her to say 'No.' On the stairs Mr. Graff again said, 'Take her in and search her.'

"I don't know how I was taken up stairs—whether by the stairs or elevator—yet I did not lose my self-control until afterward. I was taken into the superintendent's private office, and the door was shut. Mr. Graff stood outside at the door. He told Policeman Raleigh to shake out my bundle, my valise—even my pocketbook. All this was done; even my money was shaken out. I took off my waterproof and unfastened my wrapper. There was but little left to search. Mr. Moore, the superintendent, was in and out of the room while I was there, but not until after my things were searched. When they saw that I was innocent the three men turned pale, and did not seem to know what to do. The policeman told me I had better go home, and Mr. Moore said he did not want me to stay in the office. I demanded to be taken to the police station. I told them that I was unnerved by what had happened; that I had been arrested for the first time in my life, dragged through the streets and accused of theft. I told them a terrible mistake had been made. I alone am responsible," said Policeman Raleigh, and he added, "We do these things every day." A young woman entered the room and I asked her to do what searching remained to be done, but she said it was unnecessary. Again and again I asked to be taken to the police station. I had explained where I got the robe and whatever else I had about me, and the men would not hear me until they satisfied themselves of their mistake, but I wanted to be taken to the station and give proof of what I said. I told them of my respectability and of the family I had reared, that occupies a good position in society. I wanted to know who was responsible for what I had been made to suffer. The policeman refused to take me, and the other men said there was nothing against me and I had better go home."

Mrs. Mallach explained that by preferring charges against the policeman she would be able to fix the responsibility where it belongs. She was visibly affected by the recollection of the occurrences in the store, and she says that she was rendered ill by the nervous shock she suffered, and she has not yet recovered from its effects.

PRES. WILLIAMS'S HANDWRITING

Discussed by Witnesses in his Behalf Concerning Anthony Comstock's Charge.

After taking some more testimony, the case of President Edward F. Williams of the Greenpoint Savings Bank, who is accused by Anthony Comstock of having sent an obscene letter through the mails, was again adjourned yesterday. United States Commissioner Allen receives $8 for each day's services from the Government. The testimony yesterday, which continued to be in behalf of the defendant, was opened by Thomas C. Smith, who testified that he had known Mr. Williams for eleven years, and considered his character to be exceptionally good. He knew Mr. Williams's handwriting and did not believe that there was any similarity between the anonymous letter and Mr. Williams's handwriting. Mr. Williams, he thought, was incapable of inditing such a letter.

The capital "T" in the obscene letter, which a number of witnesses have selected as resembling Mr. Williams's handwriting, attracted Mr. George W. Averill's attention. He said that there was no other point of resemblance.

Clinton Furbish of Greenpoint, who had known Mr. Williams for ten years, pronounced his reputation to be unqualifiedly good, and said that he knew his handwriting so well that he could recognize it anywhere. In his opinion neither the obscene letter nor the envelope which enclosed it contained Mr. Williams's handwriting. The witness said that he learned a good deal about handwriting from a Government detective with whom he worked trying to detect the crime of a clerk who stole a letter from the post office.

Timothy Perry, a lawyer who had known Mr. Williams for twenty-seven years and knew his handwriting at sight, was very sure that the obscene letter was not in his handwriting. The only similarity in it was that it was in a sort of back hand. The language employed in the letter was not such, he thought, as Mr. Williams would use.

Herbert Geroux, President of the Lafayette Fire Insurance Company, said that the obscene letter was not in Mr. Williams's handwriting. The anonymous letter, he thought, had been written by a boy's hand, and contained many instances of misspelling, of which Mr. Williams would not have been guilty.

Gilbert Potter, for whom President Williams formerly built some ships, testified that for twenty or thirty years he had found Mr. Williams's character to be first rate, and he believed that he was incapable of using the language in the letter. The handwriting did not resemble Mr. Williams's.

George W. Hunt, secretary of the Lafayette Fire Insurance Company, testified that he was acquainted with Mr. Williams's handwriting, and did not believe that the anonymous letter was written by him. Theodore Rich, Deputy Comptroller, who testified that he had had considerable experience in handwriting, testified that in his judgment the obscene letter was not written by Mr. Williams.

United States District Attorney Tenney put the following question to several witnesses, but it was excluded: "If you have two letters, in which there are several words alike, and many of the letters alike, for instance, the small 't', the final 'd,' the final 'r,' the letter 'o,' and the loopholes, and the word 'particular' so similar that it was interchangeable in the letters, would you say that both letters were written by the same person?"

The examination was adjourned until Saturday.

A CREDULOUS SWISS.

Intrusting Six Hundred Dollars to a Stranger, Clothed Like a Priest.

Detectives Gannon and Hayes of the Western Steamboat Squad brought to the Jefferson Market Police Court yesterday two Italians, on suspicion that they were Fontana Ginseppe and Geordani A. Bartolomeol, who are believed to have swindled Emil Battet, a Swiss, out of $600. Battet arrived in this city on Sunday from Des Moines, Iowa, on his way to the Canton Vaud, Switzerland. He stopped at Leroy's Hotel, 188 Wooster street, and on Tuesday met Ginseppe, who pretended to be a priest. Ginseppe said he was to sail for France on the l'Amerique, the vessel in which Battet was going. He also introduced him to his friend, Bartolomeol, who appeared to be somewhat weak-minded, and who said he also was going on the l'Amerique. Bartolomeol exhibited several rolls, which, he said, contained $2,000 in gold. Ginseppe offered to take charge of the gold, and Bartolomeol readily assented. Ginseppe then asked Battet if he should not care for his money, too. Battet thought the idea a good one and gave his $600 to the pretended priest for safe keeping. The two men left at the earliest moment, and did not return. Battet reported the swindle and gave a description of the men to the police.

When arraigned in court, Battet had not yet seen them. They were remanded for examination.

A Well-Known Pool Player Dead.

Clarke E. Wilson, once a well-known billiard and pool player, died in the Ward's Island Asylum for the Insane, late on Sunday night, at the age of 36. In 1871 he won the championship of New England in the Hartford tournament. He played many other matches, and at one time he was confessedly the strongest fifteen-ball pool player in the country. It is said that he was the only man who ever pocketed the fifteen balls, naming them from one to fifteen in succession—a feat which he accomplished in a saloon in Cedar street in this city. His last public appearance was at the pool tournament in Grinnell's rooms, in April, 1878, when it was evident to the spectators that he was insane. He had been at least with any hope of success. In January, 1879, he became hopelessly insane. For a year past he has, with the exception of brief intervals, been quiet and contented, imagining himself to be a vast hotel, over the billiard department of which he presided, his price to such invited guests a longer suited to playing $200 per game.

Wilson was born in Manchester, N. H., to which place his remains will be taken.

A Drawn Wrestling Match.

BOSTON, March 17.—At 2:45 this morning, the referee in a collar-and-elbow wrestling match at the Music Hall, between John McMahon of Rutland, Vt., and H. M. Dufur of Marlboro, Mass., declared it a draw, neither side having gained a fall. Both men wished to continue the contest, but as their leave of the hall had expired, they were obliged to retire. It is understood the contestants divided the net receipts, amounting to almost $3,000.

A Produce Broker's Death.

Announcement was made in the Produce Exchange yesterday of the sudden death of Lewis Thomas, a member of the Exchange and a grain and feed merchant at 148 Twelfth street, Jersey City. He dropped dead while at dinner on Tuesday evening. He was 70 years old, and senior partner of the firm of L. Thomas & Sons, proprietors of the Long Dock feed mills.
