FORSYTH STREET'S OLD CHURCH.

An Effort Made on its Ninetieth Anniversary to Save it from Financial Disaster.

The first edifice of the Forsythe Street Methodist Church was erected in 1790. Yesterday was celebrated as the ninetieth anniversary. In the morning Mrs. Maggie N. Van Cott occupied the platform, and Mr. Chauncey Shaffer, a friend of the church, sat in the chancel, in the old arm chair, once the accustomed seat in the church of Bishop Asbury. After reading the 136th Psalm, Mrs. Van Cott said:

"Let us bow as little children, and, while we pray in this time-honored church, perhaps the one who once occupied that chair (pointing to Bishop Asbury's chair), and who is sitting on the right hand of glory, even Bishop Asbury, may look down upon us from the shining courts."

In her sermon she told of the conversion of an elderly ticket agent at a railroad station. A stranger looked in at him one day and asked, "Is Jesus Christ here?" He said no, and the stranger passed on; but no one could tell what results a word might produce. The ticket agent came to one of her meetings and said: "Quick, let me speak, for my heart is full." "Then you'd better speak before we open the meeting," said she to him, and he did, pouring out thanks from a full heart. Mrs. Van Cott's text was "I beseech ye, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service," and, lifting her face and outstretching her hands as in the act of offering, she presented her body, her soul, her talents, her will, and everything she possessed unto God. Her face glowed with enthusiasm, and the audience looked and listened with intense interest.

At 3 o'clock the Rev. John Wesley Bond Wood, pastor of the church thirty years ago, now a supernumerary, conducted a love feast, assisted by Mr. J. S. Barndollar, a former superintendent. There were present Mr. George Sharp, who used to lead the choir, and Mr. John Kelsnaw, who now lives in New Jersey. Mr. Wood said he was hungry. After fifty years of cutting and carving for others, he was yet willing to work, but he had come to this love feast hungry, and he wanted something to eat. In the old time rich and poor used to gather, bringing food. The rich brought the most, but each brought something. He hoped that each had brought something to this meeting. Mr. Wood is 76 years old. He told how, when a youngster, he had come to the church, and how the broad-shouldered pastor, formerly a sailor, espied him at the door and said: "Come, John, I'll give you a tow," and pulled him through the dense crowd up the aisle to the altar; how he modestly crawled along by the altar rail out of sight in the crowd until the pastor caught him by the hand again, set him up before the people, and bade him tell what God had done for him. He began to talk, though what he was saying he did not know. Later, while he was a clerk in the office of the Advocate, he was told by Nathan Bangs that he had been appointed to preach in the Forsyth Street Church. He said he could not go, for the church was large then, but he was told that he must. When he arose to speak, he did not know what he was going to say, but he felt confident, because he had taken long walks by himself, praying constantly to God.

Mr. Barndollar attended the first love feast held in the new structure built in 1833. Brother Thomas Truslow was then librarian, and Stephen Barker entered the Sunday school at that time. Mr. Truslow said he entered the Sunday school in 1824 as teacher of an infant class. The only place that was found for him in the crowded room was on a trunk in the break of a chimney. It was there that he began his connection with the Church. He is now a member of St. Paul's Methodist Church.

Mr. Stephen Barker and the Rev. A. C. Morehouse, the pastor, made appeals for money to render it possible for a Methodist church to be retained in that vicinity, Forsyth street, near Division. There are many Jews and Roman Catholics, where formerly Methodists were in a large plurality. There are two mortgages on the church, the first for $45,000, and the second for $14,000 or $15,000. The first mortgage might lie, because the tenements built in front of the church afforded sufficient income to pay the interest; but the second was pressing. A pledge of about $7,000 was yesterday secured. About $1,000 of this was pledged yesterday.

Wanted—Females.
