MRS. BEECHAM'S SILK DRESS.

AND THE NOVEL LAWSUIT OF THE DRESSMAKER WHO MADE IT.

Accused, She Said, of Stealing Some of the Material, and then Kept in a Parlor until she Agreed to Surrender her Carpet—A Carpenter's Computations in Evidence.

NEW BRUNSWICK, N. J., March 25.—One of the most novel of lawsuits, in its details, has just been tried in this quaint little New Jersey city. The trial has stirred the interest of New Brunswick society, and every sitting of the court in which it took place place has been attended by fashionable ladies and some of the best-known people in the town. Mrs. Tabitha Beecham, the defendant, is well known in local society. With her husband, Joseph Beecham, she lives in a fine house in one of the handsomest streets in the town. In February last Mrs. Beecham employed Miss Lucretia Voorhis, a dressmaker, to make her two new Easter dresses. One of these was to be of silk, and Mrs. Beecham supplied twenty yards of silk, twenty inches wide, to the dressmaker to be made up. The other was to be of cashmere, and ten yards of that material of double width were supplied to Miss Voorhis. The dressmaker began her labors on one Thursday in February, and worked cutting and stitching and basting until the following Saturday. Everything went along smoothly enough until Mrs. Beecham had tried on the basted silk. Then she protested that the dress was not full enough to please her taste. Miss Voorhis declared that it was as full as the supply of material would permit. Mrs. Beecham measured the pieces, counting a yard from the tip of her nose to the end of her outstretched arm, and declared that all the stuff supplied was not in the dress. There were some words, and Miss Voorhis quitted the house. A few days later she went to Mrs. Beecham's house again, and was there all day. When she went away Mrs. Beecham was in possession of two separate pieces of writing bearing Miss Voorhis's signature. One of these was an order for twenty-two yards of carpet belonging to the dressmaker; the other released Mrs. Beecham from all obligations to pay for the labor the dressmaker had expended upon the dresses. Mr. Beecham drove to Miss Voorhis's boarding house, and, presenting the order, received the carpet.

The next day the dressmaker declared that she had been induced to go to Mrs. Beecham's to finish the work she had begun, and that when she arrived there she was imprisoned in the parlor and detained there until, to regain her liberty, she had appended her name to the papers described. She procured a warrant for the arrest of Mrs. Beecham on a charge of false imprisonment, and began a civil suit for the recovery of damages for false imprisonment, and an action in trover and conversion to secure the return or the value of her carpet.

It is the last mentioned of these three separate actions that has just been tried. The trial was in the County Court House, before Judge Ford and a jury of six.

Miss Voorhis testified in her own behalf that she had put all the material in both dresses and had taken none. She had worked at Mrs. Beecham's until the Saturday in February spoken of, and did not return until the following Tuesday. Then Mrs. Beecham charged her with having stolen six yards of the material. When she tried to explain Mrs. Beecham took her breath away, she said, by calling her a thief and liar. Miss Voorhis went away in tears, and for a day or two afterward was busy with her needle and thread at the house of Mrs. Stilie in Stelton. Mrs. Beecham followed her there, and commanded her to return to New Brunswick to finish the work she had begun. "If you don't," said Mrs. Beecham, according to Miss Voorhis's story, "I'll get an officer and make you." "Oh, there is no need of that, I'll go," returned Miss Voorhis, and she confidentially told the Court and jury that the reason of her readiness to go was that she was anxious to get clear of Mrs. Beecham. Mrs. Beecham was already at home when Miss Voorhis reached there. When the dressmaker appeared at the door she said she was told to go through the kitchen door, for that was "good enough for any thief to go in by." It did not appear whether Miss Voorhis availed herself of that invitation or not.

When she got into the parlor, Miss Voorhis said, Mrs. Beecham remarked: "Now I've got you. You do not leave here again till you have made this thing right." And," Miss Voorhis continued, "they just kept me in that room, refusing to let me step out till I had signed these two papers. From 11 o'clock in the morning till 6:30 o'clock in the evening I was watched and guarded and subjected to the most tantalizing insults. To escape further imprisonment and insult I signed the papers."

Then, one after another, a half dozen professional dressmakers ascended the witness stand, and, first throwing the dresses over and over, to scan and measure them, declared that each dress contained as much material as Mrs. Beecham had supplied. This view from Mrs. Beecham the observation that "they are all alike."

To rebut this the defence produced Mr. Stephen De Hart. Mr. De Hart is a carpenter, builder, and architect. He had measured all the dresses in the house with a two-foot rule and a tape line. According to his computation, the superficial area of the material in the silk dress was 11,069 square inches, or 15 yards and 248 square inches. The other dress overran the proper measure a little.

Thomas Kelly and George Gillain, who were engaged in Mrs. Beecham's house on the day of Miss Voorhis's alleged imprisonment, testified that they would have aided her to escape if she had appealed to them. One noticed that she was uneasy; the other observed nothing of the kind.

Mr. Beecham testified to the scene when Miss Voorhis was charged with theft, and to his wife's going after the dressmaker to Stelton. "They came back from Stelton on the same train," he said, "Miss Voorhis getting out on the south side, Mrs. Beecham on the north side. Miss Voorhis got the start, and Mrs. Beecham ran after her, hallooing to her to stop, or she'd have her stopped. I started to run after the two, but I stopped soon. I was not going to make a fool of myself."

Then Mr. Beecham said he jumped into his wagon and went home. Why did he not wait for the ladies? Because the roads were so bad that three couldn't ride behind one horse. He denied that there had been any compulsion in the signing of the papers. He took his earrings and went for the carpet and brought it back with him.

"Why didn't you let Miss Voorhis ride with you to her home, and save her from walking through the storm?" asked Counselor Rice.

"I never allow any woman to ride with me but my wife," returned the witness.

"And that wasn't all Miss Voorhis agreed to," continued Mr. Beecham. "She was to pay for the lost silk and take the merino dress she had spoiled at the cost of the material, and $1 added for the work my wife had put on it, a total of $15.63. And she gave us the carpet as security for the payment of the money."

The jury deliberated an hour, then gave judgment for Miss Voorhis for $20.63, the full amount claimed.

Mrs. Beecham went out declaring that there is no justice in New Jersey, and that decent people have no rights that any one is bound to respect.

THE DEFENCE OF A PRISONER

By Assistant District Attorney Bell, Cavalier of the Order of the Rose.

Jeremiah Sullivan having been arraigned, yesterday, in the Court of General Sessions, on the charge of burglary in the first degree, said that he had been unable to secure counsel. Judge Cowing looked vainly about the crowded court room for a lawyer. Aside from Assistant District Attorney Lyon, the prosecutor, there was none. The proceedings were at a standstill. Just then the door opened, and Assistant District Attorney Bell entered.

"Do you want to undertake a case for the defence, Mr. Bell?" Judge Cowing asked. "The lawyers on the other side of the bar appear to have deserted us."

"I have no objection," Mr. Bell replied.

"I'll tell you what I'll do, Bell," Mr. Lyon said. "I'll toss up a cent to see which of us shall prosecute, and which shall defend. I don't mind trying my hand on the other side of the bar for once."

Mr. Bell looked at the indictment and talked with Sullivan and the arresting policeman. A conference with the arresting officer is not a privilege accorded ordinarily to lawyers for the defence, but Mr. Lyon, probably in consideration of Mr. Bell's inexperience, interposed no objection. When he had finished his consultations he moved an adjournment.

"It's the same old story, your Honor," Mr. Lyon replied. "The lawyer on the other side always wants delay when he knows that he has no valid defence. But, considering all the circumstances, particularly the prisoner's unfortunate condition (laughter), I will make no objection."

Judge Cowing remanded Sullivan.

Sullivan is probably the only person charged with burglary in this State who can boast of having had as counsel a lawyer who has the right to shoulder a foreign title. Mr. Bell was made a Cavalier of the Order of the Rose of Brazil recently by the Emperor, in recognition of his successful prosecution of two forgers of the Brazilian currency who were arrested in this city.

A Dispute of Title at Rockaway.

The Town Board of Hempstead, L. I., despite the protests of Judge Donohue, John H. Cheever, Mrs. Horace F. Clark, Newbold Lawrence, and others, yesterday leased to John L. C. Norton of Rockaway the beach adjoining the Clark property on the west, and extending for nearly a quarter, at an annual rental of $1,000. Newbold Lawrence claims to own the beach and will contest the town's title. Supervisor Clements says that the question of the beach's ownership is fully investigated, and he has no doubt of the validity of the action of the Board.

THE REV. MR. BISCOE'S CASE.

The Newark Conference Appoints a Court of Inquiry to Take Testimony.

In the Methodist Conference at Paterson, N. J., yesterday, the case of the Rev. Mr. Biscoe of the Arlington M. E. Church came up. The Rev. Mr. Biscoe is charged with being the father of the child of a young woman in Parsippany, N. J. Mr. Biscoe's church, after having investigated the charge through a committee, dismissed the case on the strength of the report that there was no foundation for the charge. A threat was then made to take the matter before the Conference. Soon afterward Mr. Biscoe resigned from the church and tendered his withdrawal from the Conference as a Methodist clergyman. Mr. Biscoe was expected to be present as one of the delegates to the Conference, but he did not appear. Yesterday morning Presiding Elder R. Van Horne of the Newark District arose and said they had a complaint to offer against one brother from his district. No name was mentioned, but everybody seemed to know it referred to Mr. Ellis F. Biscoe of Arlington. Mr. Van Horne said the subject had been referred to a committee of the Conference, who had suspended the brother and prepared the case to be brought before the Conference. The brother, however, had forestalled action by withdrawing from the Conference and from the Methodist Episcopal Church. The speaker had all the brother's parchments in his possession.

Bishop Wiley said the withdrawal of the brother could not be allowed, unless the Conference so voted. It took two parties to the contract originally to get into the Conference, and the sanction of the two parties must be obtained before the connection could be broken. The subject was now before the Conference for consideration.

The Rev. Solomon Parsons said he appeared there as counsel for Mr. Biscoe. Mr. Biscoe had at first desired to come there and stand trial, but he had subsequently changed his mind and concluded to withdraw. The Brother had understood that if he withdrew the charges would not be pressed. The speaker thought that under such circumstances the withdrawal should be allowed by all means.

Presiding Elder Van Horne said that the nature of the charges were such that he did not think it proper for the Conference to allow a withdrawal. He thought that the brother should have a trial. Public sentiment demanded that the Conference should thoroughly investigate it before allowing it to drop.

After further discussion the subject was tabled. It was then moved that the case be referred to a proper court for trial. After further discussion this was carried. The Bishop appointed the following named clergymen as a court of inquiry: The Rev. Messrs. Isaac N. Van Sant, Chairman; Isaac Thomas, J. J. Howard, J. I. Boswell, J. W. Bartine, J. H. Bryan, E. Clement, C. Larew, G. Winsor, S. J. Morris, D. Walters, W. L. Sill, G. W. Horton, J. W. Young. The Rev. C. R. Barnes was appointed as the Secretary to make the report of the investigation to the Conference, and the Rev. G. W. Smith was appointed to act as prosecutor. Mr. Parsons was prevailed upon to act as counsel for the accused minister.

Chairman Van Sant called a meeting of the court of inquiry in one of the small rooms leading off from the lecture room in the basement of the church, at 2 o'clock P. M., to which all interested parties in the case were invited to come. The committee met with closed doors, and the afternoon session is reported to have been entirely confined to reading over the voluminous testimony that had been taken by the first committee appointed to investigate the case. A motion to make the charges public and hold the investigation with open doors is said to have been voted down by a decisive majority.

CONVICT JOHNSON'S GAME.

Pretending to be a Slave of Duty while Planning an Escape.

Warden Shevlin of the Kings County Penitentiary has suspended both the watchman and the keeper who have charge of the hospital in the penitentiary from which the two convicts, Johnson and Connelly, made their escape on Monday night last. The investigation made so far has not yet resulted in determining where the convicts obtained the nails and cleats, and when they got the opportunity to make the ladder which they used in escaping. Johnson was steward for the hospital, and had won the confidence of the authorities by his strict attention to duty. He had even become unpopular with other prisoners because of his habit of reporting their slightest infraction of discipline. When the convalescent patients were given leave to walk in the sun for a certain length of time he invariably reported them if they overstayed a few minutes. He was in the last stages of consumption, so it was thought he would not walk out of the prison if the door was thrown open. The result seems to indicate that he was playing a confidence game, for he had been many weeks in perfecting his plans for escape. As steward he carried during the day the key of the storeroom, but it was taken away from him at night, when everything was inspected. There were two doors to this storeroom, one of which was fastened with buttons and brass screws, and consequently was noisy to open. Johnson removed these screws stealthily, one by one, and arranged a bottle tied to a string as a weight to hold the door shut. Then he made a ladder from the top of a bench by nailing a number of cleats upon it. This was stored away in the storeroom.

Johnson, in addition, collected a quantity of cord such as is used about the cots, and bound enough of it together to make a rope with which to lift himself down from the roof. He used the ladder to get up to the ceiling of the hospital floor at the window, and then by shifting the cleats he made space enough between the ceiling and the window, which serves for two floors, to admit his body. When he and Connelly reached the floor above they were in the bundle room, where all of the civilian clothing of the prisoners is stored. Here they stripped off their convict garb and secured a new dress, with which they escaped. They got to the tower leading to the roof, and then by means of the rope let themselves down to the ground.

The Warden submitted a statement of the result of his investigation to the Monitorial Committee, but no report upon the subject was made to the Supervisors yesterday. An active search is being made for the men, and the Warden expects to recapture them soon. Johnson has been in the prison at Cherry Hill, at Sing Sing, and at Blackwell's Island, and at each place has been in the hospital. Several times he was thought to be dying, and he was everywhere treated as a man who was not expected to live long.

MRS. LENA SCHROELL'S SUICIDE.

Death from a Dose of Nitric Acid after Lingering more than Two Weeks.

Mrs. Lena Schroell of 152 East 110th street died early yesterday morning from the effects of a dose of poison taken on March 9. She was 26 years of age, and had been married to John Schroell three years. The couple lived with their father-in-law, Mr. Koeing, who keeps a beer garden. Her husband says that about March 6 he bought a small vial of nitric acid for the cure of corns. He put the vial on the mantelpiece in his bedroom. It was labelled "Poison." On the morning of the 9th inst. he scolded his wife because she had for several days been drinking too much beer. At about 10 o'clock A. M. he heard her scream, and on running to the bedroom saw her writhing in pain upon the bed. He asked her what the matter was. She could only articulate "Poison." He then saw the empty vial of nitric acid upon the floor. Dr. Brooks of 113th street and Lexington avenue was called. The lining of her stomach was burned out, and no food could be retained.

Her parents told Coroner Ellinger yesterday that she used to attend their bar, and at the age of 18 had acquired the habit of drinking beer and strong liquor, and that she would often drink to excess. This is the second wife of Mr. Schroell who has committed suicide. He is said to be a hard-working, sober, and industrious painter.

New York 'Longshoremen Driven Off.

The steamship San Domingo, owned by William P. Clyde & Co., was moored at Robinson's stores, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, with a cargo of sugar, coffee, hides, and logwood, and fifty 'longshoremen from New York went over to unload it. They refused to go to work for less than forty cents an hour, and the stevedore, Mr. Andrews, refused to pay more than thirty cents, which is all that the Brooklyn 'longshoremen get. He sent runners after unemployed men, and soon had about forty men ready to go to work. The New York men tried to persuade the others from taking the work, but in vain. Then it is alleged that they threatened to have revenge upon the men at the dinner hour. Police Capt. Leavy, learning of the disturbance, sent a platoon of men to the stores, and cleared the wharf of the New York 'longshoremen, who had interfered no further than to prevent the return of a man who had been sent up to the stores for some tools. After the crowd was dispersed, there was no more trouble threatened.

Trouble in a Synagogue.

Mr. Isaac Phillips, the chief "reader" of the Emun Israel Synagogue of Eighth avenue and Forty-first street, was in the Jefferson Market Police Court, with his head wrapped in bandages, yesterday. He is 60 years of age, and has only one arm. He complained that his prisoner, Samuel Jacobson, a trustee of the congregation, had struck him on the legs and head with a cane. Mr. Jacobson had been disorderly in the synagogue last Saturday, and Mr. Phillips remonstrated with him about his conduct. This made Jacobson angry, and he struck Phillips with the cane.

Mr. Jacobson's story was similar, with the exception that he claimed Phillips assaulted him first. Justice Duffy put Jacobson under $200 bonds to keep the peace.
