W. H. KEMBLE, THE CONVICT.

FACTS FOR THE BOARD OF PARDONS, WHICH MEETS TO-DAY.

The Story of Kemble's Attempt to Buy a Whole Legislature, Like a Flock of Sheep—Bribery, Corruption, and Perjury—The End of Kemble's Addition, Division, and Silence.

HARRISBURG, April 22.—"Kemble, Quay, and the rest of us intend to give $500 for a vote and $1,000 for a speech. We don't expect you to make a speech, but have agreed to make it $1,000 for you. This arrangement has been made with a number of members."

The speaker was Charles B. Salter of Philadelphia. He was acting for William H. Kemble of Addition, Division, and Silence fame. Kemble was the head of the iniquity, Salter was the legs. The person led into temptation was Edmund D. Graff, a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from Armstrong County. He is a young man of blameless life, and could have no possible motive for giving false testimony before Mr. Wolfe's investigation committee. Then Salter took Graff to Quay's office, where they met Kemble. This is what Kemble said: "Any arrangement that is made you may depend upon us carrying out."

The quotations are from Graff's sworn testimony. The bill in question was the famous, or infamous, House bill 103, commonly called the Riot bill. It was intended to take $4,000,000 from the State treasury to reimburse the Pennsylvania Railroad for its losses in the Pittsburgh riots. Allegheny County has since settled the claim for $1,600,000, which is probably somewhere near the actual amount of damage sustained. But upon this actual amount of $1,600,000, Kemble had placed $2,400,000, making the claim $4,000,000. This was addition.

Out of this $2,400,000 deliberately stolen from the treasury, $500 was to be paid for each vote and $1,000 for each speech. This was division.

That is how Kemble and Salter got indicted for bribery and corruption. But Kemble had left his silence at home, and that is why he got indicted for perjury. He came to Harrisburg and established his headquarters at the Brady House, alternating between that hotel and the State House. He sent out his cappers, Salter, Petroff, Crawford, and Rumberger, the last a member from Armstrong County, brought the legislative flies to his web. Rumberger invited one member too many—Silverthorn of Erie County; and Silverthorn let the cat out of the bag. This is what he testified under oath, before Wolfe's committee:

Mr. Rumberger approached me, and says: "Would you like to make some money?" I says: "It depends upon circumstances." He says: "There is a chance to make some money out of the Riot bill. I am to have $1,500 for voting for that bill, and I will give you the half of it if you will vote for it."

Silverthorn took time for reflection. He consulted Representative Short, his colleague from Erie County, and Charles S. Wolfe, the Representative from Union. They advised him to ferret out the corruption, and to "find out who was to give the money." He returned to Rumberger. His testimony continues:

Rumberger said to me, "They want to see you at headquarters. You come with me." I went with him to the Brady House. I was introduced to Mr. Kemble, and Rumberger said: "Here is the man, Mr. Kemble, that we were talking about;" and handed him a piece of paper. He then went down stairs and left me with Kemble.

After talking about the Riot bill, Kemble said: "If you will support this bill, whatever arrangement is made between you and Mr. Rumberger, I will see that it is paid." After I came down, Mr. Rumberger was in the barroom. He says to me: "I put $750 on that paper I handed to Kemble; their customary price is $500, but in consideration of my respect for you I have put $750 for you, giving you $250 more than they are paying members generally."

This testimony tallies with Graff's. To him Salter had said: "Kemble, Quay, and the rest of us intend to give $500 for a vote. * * * * But we have agreed to make it $1,000 to you." To him Kemble had said: "You may depend upon us carrying it out."

To Silverthorn Rumberger had said: "Their customary price is $500, but * * * I have put $750 for you." And Kemble said: "I will see that it is paid."

We return to the slip of paper which Rumberger gave Kemble before Silverthorn. Kemble was one of the first witnesses examined. The head was first dissected; afterward, the legs. Here is his testimony:

Question by Mr. Wolfe—When Rumberger introduced Mr. Silverthorn to you, did he hand you anything?

Answer by Kemble—Yes, sir.

Q.—What did he hand you?

A.—He handed me a memorandum. I do not remember what it was, unless it was something about ——. It probably intimated to me what this man's weak spot was.

Silverthorn had not yet testified. Rumberger had been on a big drunk ever since the investigation had commenced. The Chairman refused to swear him on that account. Kemble did not know that Mr. Wolfe had knowledge of the $750 written on that paper. So he joked about the "weak spot." The examination continues:

Q.—He handed you something?

A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—What did he hand you?

A.—He handed me nothing at all. He handed me nothing.

Nothing can be plainer than that. Kemble is now under indictment for perjury. The examination continues:

Q.—Did he hand you a piece of paper?

A.—I think he did, but I cannot remember what it was he did.

Q.—Were the figures $750 upon it?

A.—No, sir! No, sir! No, sir!

Q.—You said that Mr. Rumberger handed you a piece of paper?

A.—No, sir. I did not say so.

Q.—Have you any recollection?

A.—No recollection of a single case.

Q.—Of any person handing you any paper?

A.—None at all.

Kemble was bold at the beginning, and brazenly flung defiance at the committee. The committee was composed of five. Speaker Long had appointed three who had made speeches in favor of the bill. Kemble was asked whether he had "offered any money or thing of value, testimonial, privilege, or personal advantage to any member of the General Assembly to influence him in his official action on House bill No. 103, commonly known as the Riot bill." He was told this was the language of the Constitution. This is how he answered: "I know the Constitution has got a lot of stuff in it that none of you live up to, and I am no better than other people."

Read what Kemble said under oath:

I am employed as an attorney by the Pennsylvania Railroad to look after their interests in this bill, of course! I was not here for love or anything of that kind. It takes a head to do it all the time. I acted as the head in that case.

Q. (By Mr. Wolfe)—Did not Charles B. Salter bring into your presence, and that of Mr. Quay, Mr. Graff of Armstrong County?

A.—Yes, sir.

Again he testifies:

I do propose to pay Mr. Salter for all the trouble and all the work he rendered to me. Everything he did for me I propose to pay him for.

Before reviewing the testimony of other members corruptly solicited, let us consider Kemble's logrolling scheme. Under an old law Allegheny County was liable for losses by riot within her borders. That county contains the cities of Pittsburgh and Allegheny City. The combined city and county debts were large—nearly twenty million dollars. The county sought to throw the liability upon the State. Its representatives were elected upon that issue. The railroad company wanted the State to assume the liability; the State would be a better paymaster. That corporation runs the political machine in Philadelphia. That city's representatives were instructed by their masters to assist in the scheme. But Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties could not carry the measure. Kemble suggests a way to gather recruits. The border counties had a claim for losses incurred by rebel raids during the War. Every farmer who had lost a chicken from his henroost wanted a $20 greenback for it. These border claims aggregated $3,000,000. Kemble testifies:

"I tried to bargain with the border raid men that I would help them in consideration of their helping us."

Representative White of Warren County was approached by Salter, who told him it would be to his advantage to vote for the bill, and advised him to go and see Kemble. Salter did not offer any money himself. He only told where it could be obtained. He promised $500 to Representative Cargill of Susquehanna County, who testified:

He (Salter) afterward raised $1,000. He talked to me more than twice. He argued very strongly in favor of it. He said there were two men from Philadelphia would be responsible for the pay. One was Quay, the other was Kemble. He said either of them would.

Cargill, a rank, innocent-looking farmer, was also beset by Crawford, the Superintendent of Public Grounds. He continues his testimony:

He (Crawford) first told me those who voted for the bill would get $500 each. Afterward he told me they would get $1,000 each. He spoke about taking me to see Mr. Kemble.

Salter, the legs of the iniquity, never tired. He sought Bowman, the German member from York County. The following quotation is from Bowman's sworn testimony:

He told me that it would be advisable for me, as a border raid man, to vote for the Pittsburgh bill, in order to put our bill through. He told me that * * * * there was a consideration of $1,000 in it, and I should see him, and then he would take me to Quay & Co., and they would make matters all right.

Salter subsequently tried without avail to invigorate Bowman into Kemble's den at the Brady House. And at the moment the bill was up for second reading, or rather the motion for its reconsideration, Representative Sherwood, Bowman's colleague from York County, was worrying Bowman. Three times he sought to get Bowman to go and see Kemble. And Bowman swears that Sherwood said to him: "All he wants of you, so far as I can understand, he wants to know your price."

For giving this testimony Bowman was brutally assaulted on the floor of the House by George E. Sherwood, the member from York. He was felled to the floor with a cane and violently struck after his fall, blow upon blow. He was assisted to his home by friends.

D. C. Clarke, a member from Philadelphia, took Representative Foster to Salter, who in turn took him to Kemble, King of the Roosters. Foster tells his story under oath. He is a German. He says:

Salter said there was $300 in it (the Riot bill). Two weeks afterward Salter came to me and said: "We had a meeting in Philadelphia in regard to House bill No. 103, and we have raised the money from $300 to $500." I didn't care anything about Clarke, nor anything about Salter. They followed me up like a set of hounds following a deer; I couldn't get rid of them. One day in March Salter sent for me of the cages, and I waited with him to the Brady House. I had never seen the King of the Roosters, and I wanted to see that man, to see how he got around the Legislature more. He (Salter) took me up stairs, and introduced me to a man by the name of Kemble. When I was introduced, Salter left the room, and it was all private to ourselves. Mr. Kemble looked at me closely—examined me from the brow of my head to the bottom of my toe.

He said: "How are you on bill 103?"

I said: "I cannot vote for bill 103. Now, how can a man vote for it if he won't violate Article VII. of the Constitution?"

"If that is your talk," he says, "I don't want to have anything more to do with you."

He talked somewhat sharp. I looked at him and he looked at me. He says: "Well, I don't want to pay you for your vote. I will pay you for your labor."

Then says I: "I know that ex-members, and a good many, have had such a promise as that. And when the bill fell, Sam Joseph, a member from Philadelphia, had one of those roosters from Philadelphia, and came around lobbying all the time, and that he would promise."

I meant to say that Sam Joseph had to promise money and never paid it. At the same time I told him he might be one of the same stripe as Sam Joseph. And he said:

"Well, if you think Sam Joseph is right sawed off?"

I told him "I couldn't take any money for my vote."

Stephen J. Smith is another member approached by Salter. Smith is from Berks County, and swears:

He (Salter) said there were six or seven bills on the files when in there was $1,500, and he said among them was the Riot bill—there was $300 in it. Afterward, out on the stone steps—I was coming up and he walked toward me and said that they had come to the conclusion to give $1,000 to a member that votes for the Riot bill; he said $500 before the vote is taken and $500 afterward.

This offer was declined with thanks.

Again Salter turns up in connection with Joseph H. Maclay, member from Mifflin County. Maclay swears:

Salter came to me—to my desk—and spoke to me about the Riot bill; he said it had been decided, or proposed—I don't remember the word used, but a word similar to that, perhaps one of them—meaning the members of the House $500, and the Senators $1,000, for supporting the bill. He made the statement that he thought it could be arranged to pay the members $1,000 as well as the Senators.

Salter approached Henry C. Moore, the member from Bucks County, also. Moore swears:

Salter told me he understood there was some money in it. I do not recollect the amount, but I think he mentioned $500. That ended the conversation then. When the bill was pending on the indefinite postponement, I think, he came to me again, to my seat, and said, "Now, Harry, I want you to vote for that bill." I said, "No, I cannot." Then he gave me to understand—he said he understood or believed, I do not know what the language was—that there was $1,000 in it. I told him "I could not vote for it under no consideration, as the bill was very unpopular, and our people were opposed to it." He then left me, and said "that was right."

Salter worked hard enough to earn his money from Kemble. We next hear of him through the testimony of W. R. Worthington, a member from Bucks County:

Salter told me, after Mr. Long's amendment came up, that there would be a consideration of $1,000 if I would support the bill.

Charles Miller, the representative from Snyder County, boarded at the Brady House, Kemble's headquarters. He testifies:

He (Kemble) called me to his room. He wanted me to vote for the bill, and I told him I couldn't do it, because my people were opposed to it. He says if I would vote for the bill he would give me $2,000. I told him I couldn't do it; my people were opposed to it, and I wouldn't vote for it.

John H. Taggart is the senior publisher of Taggart's Sunday Times. He testifies as follows:

I think about four weeks ago Mr. Kemble—W. H. Kemble—called at my office. He wanted to know whether we could not be induced to advocate the measure. We had been opposing it. I told him it was out of the question. He advanced all the arguments on the other side, and finally wanted to know whether we would withdraw our opposition in the Times if it was made to our interest. He said he would give me $500 if I would cease opposition. I told him it was out of the question.

But it is useless to multiply instances. Chris. Magee sent his checks all over the State, "doctoring" newspapers by the score. Petroff, a member from Philadelphia, who had been expelled in 1876 for corruption in the Boom bill, tried to buy Representatives Watson of Mercer and Macfey of Mifflin. Petroff doesn't like detectives, and so he threatened to "slug" Detective Frank, who was employed by the Rent and Taxpayers' Association of Philadelphia to ferret out corruption.

Everywhere was corruption—in the House of Representatives, in the Speaker's room, the lobbies, the committee rooms, the steps, the Capitol grounds, the railway carriages, the Brady House, and Kemble's private room. We trace corruption through Salter and Crawford and Petroff up to Kemble, the fountain head.

Kemble himself acknowledges his guilt in open court; so does Salter, his servant. And their case is to come before Quay on an application for pardon!
