AFTER FOUR YEARS.

The Marriage of Mr. W. E. English of Indianapolis to Miss Fox, the Actress.

From the Sunday Mercury.

In August, 1879, the Mercury published the story of two lovers who had been kept apart by the prejudices of the friends of one of the contracting parties, and then had been doomed to eternal separation, as they thought, by the hasty marriage of the lady. At that time we left the twain in tears and despair. Now the benign genius of divorce has come to the rescue, and we are enabled to chronicle the final and happy ending of this course of true and long-tried love as follows:

On Monday, June 7, in Philadelphia, Will E. English, manager of English's New Opera House at Indianapolis, and Miss Annie Fox, late juvenile lady of the Chestnut Street Theatre Dramatic Company, Philadelphia, were united in marriage. The wedding was a quiet affair, only a few Philadelphia friends and relatives being present, but telegrams of congratulation were received from the immediate families of both parties in Indianapolis and Boston and from numerous friends throughout the country. Mr. English is a well-known, popular, and talented young Indianian, a prominent politician, and a member of the Indiana Legislature, and the coming manager of one of the finest opera houses in the West. Miss Fox is a handsome and talented young actress, and an estimable and worthy lady in private life, who has by hard work and persistent effort, in the face of discouraging circumstances, elevated herself to a position of prominence and standing in her profession, during the past season holding a leading position in one of the first legitimate dramatic companies of the country. The young couple have experienced sufficient romance in their love affairs to stock several ordinary novels, and they are to be congratulated upon the happy conclusion to their course of true love, which it is hoped will hereafter run smoothly.

While yet a motherless young girl in her "teens," Miss Fox (then Desmond) was married to E. J. Fox, a prominent and well-known performer, and, like Lotta, Mrs. McKee Rankin, Emily Rigl, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, Alice Harrison, and many others of our prominent actresses, made her first appearances before the public upon the specialty or variety stage about a year after marriage, under the guidance of her husband, and continued to make occasional appearances during his life. Mr. Fox was a kindly, capable, and pleasant gentleman, but possessed of an uncontrollable appetite for liquor, and he lived but three years after their marriage, and shortly after his death Miss Fox joined N. D. (2) Roberts's well-known "Humpty Dumpty" company, with which she remained the greater part of the time for several seasons, appearing during the intervening time in the leading variety theatres, becoming quite prominent, and showing marked dramatic talent, she announced her permanent retirement from the specialty or variety stage about four years ago, and since that time has confined her efforts (with the exception of a few weeks in "Pinafore," &c.) to the dramatic branch of the profession.

About four years since she became acquainted with Mr. English, a mutual and devoted attachment sprang up between them immediately, and an engagement of marriage was the result. Matters continued in this position until about one year ago, when, on account of the continued objection to the marriage on the part of his aristocratic family, who, like all people of that class, had a holy horror of an actress, he wrote his betrothed informing her that, under the circumstances, he felt that it was best for all that their engagement should be broken, and that henceforth all was at an end between them.

Whether the course of time would not have again brought about a renewal of the broken vows is not certain, but the lady was convinced that all was forever ended, and about three weeks thereafter, hearing nothing from Mr. English in the mean time, in a moment of jealous desperation, on being informed that he was about to marry a young lady in Louisville, to whom he was paying some attention, she suddenly accepted the proposal of a young performer of New York, who after a short acquaintance had offered marriage, and after an explanation that she could "give her hand, but not her heart," &c., they were married in New York four days after the betrothal. On the day of betrothal, however, she wrote Mr. English a lengthy and passionate letter, informing him of what she was about to do, upbraiding him for his course, and avowing undying affection for him, bidding him an eternal farewell.

Perhaps there was a secret hope that when he received this he would rush to the telegraph office, beg to be forgiven, have the ceremony postponed, and take the first train East for reconciliation; and so he would have done, but cruel fate would not permit it. The letter was sent to his usual address in Indianapolis, but being at that time absent in Louisville, it had to be forwarded to him, and this delay caused it not to reach him until two days after the ceremony had taken place. The belle was well founded as to the course he would pursue. Like others, while he wouldn't take her when he could get her, as soon as it dawned upon him that she was lost to him forever he bitterly repented his previous action, and hoping against hope that something might have caused delay, he telegraphed to stop the ceremony if not too late, and that he would leave by the first train for New York. Arriving in New York, he wrote, asking an interview. The note was dutifully submitted by the now wretched wife to her husband, who, understanding the situation, consented to a final meeting for the exchange of letters, &c. There were tears, reproaches and recriminations, mutual admissions of continued affection, and a final resolve that Mr. E. should immediately leave the city and that this should be farewell forever. As usual, there was much left unsaid; and instead of promptly leaving as agreed, Mr. E. in a few days wrote again asking for another "final" interview. While admitting her unchanged attachment for him the lady very honorably, throughout the entire affair, refused to see or communicate with him without the knowledge and consent of the husband, and this second epistle being submitted to him, he very naturally refused to permit any further conference. This caused much bad blood and ill feeling between the two gentlemen, and while no further attempts were made to see the lady, hot words and angry threats passed between the two belligerents, and the feeling was fanned into a white heat by over-busy "mutual friends" who carried threatening messages from one to the other, until both armed themselves in expectancy of a personal collision.

Miss Fox was at this time singing as Hebe in "Pinafore" at one of our theatres, and a few evenings later, while the husband and wife were returning from the theatre, they accidentally, at a street corner, confronted Mr. English. The husband, stopping, remarked that they would settle the difficulty now, at the same time making a movement as if to draw a weapon; but being hampered, it is supposed, by having a satchel in one hand, before he could do so, Mr. English had quickly drawn and levelled his pistol at him; being at this disadvantage, and not caring to be perforated, he very sensibly, and with considerable celerity, placed the nearest corner between himself and the threatening revolver. In the mean time the lady had thrown her arms about the belligerent English, to prevent his following, at the same time giving vent to various woman's but earpiercing screams, when an officer appeared and placed the combatants under arrest. The husband was searched, but having slipped his revolver to a friend in the crowd which had collected, was released, and on the following morning, no other charge being made upon either side, English was fined for carrying a pistol, and also released.

Mr. English left the city and returned to the West a few days later. The position of the wife was now a most unhappy one, and while it was much to her credit that she had honorably refused to see or commune with Mr. English without her husband's approval, it was well known to all and openly admitted by herself in an interview published in the Mercury at the time of the difficulty that she had never ceased to be devotedly attached to Mr. English; and whatever firm resolutions were made to make the best of the situation, it was not to be supposed that a marriage under such circumstances could continue with any degree of happiness to either party. As a natural result, only three weeks of married life had elapsed when the wife quietly separated from her husband, and after some delay, caused by the rules of the Catholic Church (of which she was a member) forbidding a divorcement, and some negotiations for a dispensation, she filed her application for a divorce, which in due time was granted.

In the mean time Mr. English had himself entered regularly into theatrical life as a manager, having previously had some slight experience in that direction, and his family making the personal acquaintance of Miss Fox, and finding her a modest, retiring, and well-behaved lady, concluded that to be an actress was not necessarily so very dreadful after all, and withdrew all opposition to the union.

Great School of Mackerel.

HALIFAX, June 22.—The seines and nets at Prospect were struck and filed on the night of the 14th by a very large school of mackerel. Experienced fishers say they never knew so many come in at once. Some of the seines were carried away by sheer weight of fish. The American schooner Orient of Gloucester, which arrived yesterday, stowed 100 barrels of mackerel with a purse seine, on Saturday, off this harbor.
