THE MOUNTAIN DISTILLERS.

WHERE TWO YOUNG MEN WERE SHOT DOWN LAST WEEK.

Some Facts Concerning the Illicit Distillers of Georgia—What they Regard as their Excuse for so Openly Violating the Law.

A despatch was published in THE SUN of Saturday mentioning the receipt of a telegram from the Revenue Collector at Atlanta by the Treasury Department in Washington, representing that, while raiding illicit stills in Campbell County, Ga., his posse was fired upon by moonshiners, and the posse returned the fire, wounding two of the moonshiners. An Associated Press despatch said, however, that a party of young men were passing in the road, and the revenue posse fired upon them, mortally wounding two. They were not moonshiners, and were unarmed. In this connection the following letter from Blairsville, Ga., to the Atlanta Constitution will be of interest:

Union County has been the principal source of complaint in the recent revenue troubles. Here the operations of armed posses have been most active, and here have been found the most conclusive evidences that the policy pursued by revenue officials is wrong in principle and hard in practice. These facts were amply attested by the proceedings in the Commissioner's Court last week. A half dozen citizens had been brought here for a useless trial, on warrants sworn out by one J. J. Chesser. Chesser served his term in the penitentiary for larceny, and then moved to Union County, where he joined the church. He was soon expelled for lying and gambling, and fled the county to escape arrest for forgery. It seems that he gratified many of his personal spites before he left by suing out warrants indiscriminately against the citizens of the county. In each case he would furnish the names of nearest neighbors as witnesses. It happened that these warrants—and twenty were sworn out on Chesser's oath—were nearly every one for persons in Cheoatoe district of this county, where some of the revenue alarmists say no man's life is safe. Raid after raid had gone through this district, but most of the accused were still at large. After the appointment of a Commissioner for this county, Col. Fitzsimons sent his deputies to arrest these men. Not the slightest difficulty was experienced in doing so, and what armed raids could never have done was thus peacefully accomplished in a few days. The district had been so aggravated by these raids, and had suffered so many hardships that these men would have lain in mountain caves all the year before they would have given up to a body of officials equipped like cavalry ready for an engagement. They readily came in, however, when assured that they could have a hearing, and have an opportunity of giving bond at home. Several of these cases were disposed of to-day. As usual with Chesser's warrants, no evidence was found to sustain them; the witnesses all testified that they did not know how their names came to be given in the cases, and all swore that they would not believe Chesser on his oath. If there had been no Commissioner here these men would have been dragged away to Atlanta, taken away from their crops when they most need attention, and suffered a severe hardship, absolutely for nothing.

The armed posse plan has been a farce and a fraud, if nothing worse. In one week nearly all of the forty warrants for men in the county have been disposed of in the most peaceable manner. Men have voluntarily given themselves up by the dozen, and though some of the most noted moonshiners in the State have been arrested, there has not been a show of resistance to the single deputies of the marshal who have performed their duty without the posse. In the mean time the scores of mounted, armed men employed in the service in this and adjoining counties have been moving around, but have really done nothing. The expense to the Government has been about $200 a day.

After one has taken a tour of the counties north of the Blue Ridge, and carefully observed all that such a trip brings to his notice, it is hard for him to believe that the has been through a region which has been declared in official reports to be in a state of armed resistance to the authority of the United States. Everywhere farmers are planting their rocky fields; everywhere people are hospitable and kind. The only arms one sees are the carbines of revenue posses, and the search for any show of resistance to authority results in a dead failure.

Illicit distilling has been a curse to these counties. It has caused the arrest of hundreds of citizens. The guilty have been punished, but they have involved the innocent in the consequences of their offending. The farmers there live on small plantations, which are literally locked in on all sides. Communication with the outside world is almost impossible. They raise a few hogs, a little wheat, and make the bulk of their crop in corn. There is no market near them, and when the year's accounts are cast up they find themselves with enough meat and bread to live on, but without a cent of money. If they have made a surplus of wheat or grain, there is no market for it around them, and if they haul it sixty or eighty miles over the mountain roads to the railroad, it will be a losing business. They can easily make a hundred bushels of the finest Irish potatoes in the world on the rich mountain soil, but there is no way of getting them out. It was just this state of things which engendered the unfortunate practice of illicit distilling. There is among most of these people that spirit of mountain independence which believes that a man has a right to do pretty much what he pleases. They have always heartily disliked the law imposing a revenue of ninety cents a gallon on whiskey, agreeing with Mr. Stephens that a farmer should have the same right to boil his corn into "sweet mash" as to boil it into hominy. Distillation opened the way for supplying the brown wants and also for making a little spare change. It became common in the years first succeeding the war, when there was a demoralization in the administration of the law. Then many of the offenders could honestly plead ignorance, and the first attempts to suppress moonshining in Georgia caught many a man who honestly believed that he had a right to make "a little licker."

There is no denial of the fact that the revenue laws are unpopular. For this reason they should have been carefully enforced from the start. It has seemed, however, to be the policy of most of the officers directing the enforcement of these laws to terrify the people into obedience. This is the secret of all the trouble. Such a policy has led to gross outrages upon persons and property, to a disregard of the authority of the State to protect its citizens, to the frequent employment of desperate and unworthy men as deputies, and to the consequent feeling among the people that what was called law was in reality oppression. Besides this, it seems that Georgia has had an undue share of accusation. The amount of illicit whiskey made in this State is very much less than is generally supposed. The whiskey frauds of St. Louis and other cities make the sins of Georgia moonshiners sink into insignificance. These wholesale violators have frequently escaped punishment altogether, or if brought to a diluted justice, have endured it under kid-glove treatment, while the backwoodsman has been hauled out of his little mountain hollow, where he may have made ten or fifty gallons of whiskey, and he is held up as an example of the terrible power of the law.

It is useless, however, to complain at past injustice. Is there any hope that these troubles in Georgia will be terminated soon?

Those best acquainted with the subject declare that there is. Public opinion in the mountains is setting more firmly than ever against all forms of lawlessness. The people are condemning illicit distilling, and it will not be long before a man suspected of it will be regarded as the enemy of a community which has suffered so much by such sins as he is committing.

This country has been blessed in many respects. Its magnificent scenery; its fertile valleys, in which vegetation grows with almost tropical luxuriance; its climate, blessed with the ever fresh breath of mountain breezes and beyond the reach of all epidemics, all combine to make its future bright with promise. Its mineral wealth can only be guessed by the results of slight development. These justify the opinion that there is not on this continent a region richer in deposits of gold, copper, and a dozen other precious secrets of the soil. The people, as a rule, are illiterate, but they are hospitable, kind, and as intelligent as the masses of any population I have ever noticed. There seems to be in their dealings a sort of primitive virtue which has long since fled from more populous regions of the State. They leave their doors open at night, and sleep without the slightest fear of theft. They are liberal in their donations to all good causes among them, and in the care for the unfortunate and the ministry of every form of charity they are singularly warm-hearted and tender.

A Chase for an Eloping Sweetheart.

From the Shreveport Standard.

Yesterday morning an eloping couple arrived in this city. On the same train was a pursuer, who had followed the fugitives for four days and nights, but without their knowledge. John W. Brock and Miss Elizabeth Morgan, both of Jasper County, Missouri, were betrothed, and the time set for their marriage was last Friday night. On the same day a rival, Thomas Fremont, induced the expectant bride to elope with him, and they took the train south. The rightful claimant took the train in hot pursuit. He followed them for four days and nights without sleeping and at Marshall took the same train with the eloping couple for this city. On arriving here they engaged rooms at the Pacific House, but they had hardly been shown to their rooms when their pursuer, attended by a policeman, put in an appearance. Thomas Fremont proposed to leave the decision to the lady. After some hesitation, and with a show of great regret at taking leave of the man with whom she had eloped, she made her decision in favor of the gentleman to whom she was first engaged, and decided to cast her destiny and fortune with Mr. Brock. Mr. Fremont, the disappointed lover, relinquished all claims to the lady and took his leave. Accordingly, and as a happy finale to the episode, Mr. John W. Brock and Miss Elizabeth Morgan were united in the legal bonds of matrimony at the Pacific House yesterday morning.
